CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

FIFTY-NINTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

themselves to procure in that great commercial State a free regulator of transportation rates.

The gentleman says there are ten lines of railway running through the country this canal will traverse, if I remember his language correctly. Ah, the ten put together are rich enough either to lease or to buy this canal after you have dealt out its privileges and toll power as a charter right freely and without pay to certain men whose very names none of us were ever acquainted with until this bill presented itself in this House. They are rich enough to buy it. It can be turned over to the Pennsylvania Railroad to-morrow under this charter, because the parties who receive the charter can sell it or lease it to-morrow. And, although I can not prove it, and I do not like to make assertions that I can not prove, and therefore will not positively assert it, I suspect in my heart that it is already turned over to the Pennsylvania Railroad or some other great railroad interest.

What are you going to do by this bill? You are going to organize a private company. To do what? To do what the Government of the United States ought to do. To do it why? Because you say the Government of the United States will not do it. Why will not the Government of the United States do it? Because you are spending your money around upon the surface of the earth, sea-girdling the globe with islands that you want to possess yourselves of and neglecting the domestic development of your own people; neglecting to put your dollar where your dollar will grow, and grow into what? Into fruit of luxuriant benefit to your own children. You are choosing rather to put it elsewhere—among aliens, "half devil and half child."

I welcomed the speech made by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] this morning upon the subject of the duty of the United States to engage, in the heyday of its prosperity and its wealth (because the heyday can not last always), in the development of the industry and the commerce and the navigation of the United States and in building up great competitive lines of free waterways against exploitive railroad influences. But does the gentleman from Louisiana think he is going to arrive at his end by this sort of legislation? No. This is the first step in this line. It will not be long before we will have all sorts of private corporations coming here to get charters to do all sorts of river and harbor and canal work wherever, in the opinion of the incorporators, the work can be done profitably for the incorporators. There is no sense in deepening harbors and in building canals except to furnish a bridle upon railway rate regulation. And you can not furnish a bridle if you give substantially unrestricted power to a private corporation, whose interest it is to charge the utmost possible under the law for the transportation of freight along its line. Six hundred thousand dollars a mile, I believe, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. DAVIDSON] said this work would cost. Somewhere within the free limit of between thirty-four and forty million in toto he said the work would cost. Count the interest to be earned upon that; a dividend to be earned upon that; a fairly remunerative rate to be earned upon it. Why, if this is true, you might better appropriate out of the Treasury to-day the sum of $30,000 a mile, or even $60,000, to build a single-track road (and $60,000 a mile would build a double track along that line), and then give it to somebody free upon the condition that they would not charge anything upon the original cost.

My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] says that he has not heard anybody but Democrats and a few railroads opposing this legislation. Ah, my friend Mr. DALZELL and I have served in the United States Congress too long for him, of all men, to accuse me of being tied up to the railroad interests of this country. The Pennsylvania Railroad is not close to me. Let him say how close it is to him. I have no interest in this bill except the interest that every citizen of the United States has in it, and one further interest, and that is the interest, as an inhabitant of the lower Mississippi Valley, of seeing to it that the railroad interests of this country and private corporation interests of this country do not forestall the great enterprise of a free canal from the Great Lakes to the lower Mississippi, leading out by New Orleans to the Panama Canal. Gentlemen say that "they are going to do this for nothing"—that is to say, it is not going to cost the Government, as a government, anything. But it will cost the people something; and I want to warn you now, every man of you, that votes for this bill will return to curse you when your people find out what this canal company charges.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman——

Mr. WILLIAMS. One moment. Later on, when you find that the commerce along that canal must pay tolls in order that this corporation may be satisfied, then you will find out that you have made a mistake, and I do not doubt that while making it you have made it honestly. You are just as honest as I am, nine-tenths of you, and I have no doubt you will have made the mistake honestly, believing that you were not making it, but you do now make it all the same.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have promised to yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You said a few moments ago that the Federal Government should build this canal. There is not even a bill, I take it, introduced for the Government of the United States to build this canal.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know whether there is or not.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And we would not do it if such a bill was introduced.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will vote for it any time it is introduced.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, if the Federal Government is not ready to build it, I am told by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] that these parties have $35,000 to go forward and build it with private capital, and the rates are to be controlled by the Interstate Commerce Commission, almost like this miserable bill provides we passed the other day, that we were not allowed to amend and make better.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is my friend asking a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will you give me the reason why you object to private individuals taking private money and building this canal, that the Government can and will control, that the Government is not ready to build and does not want to build?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will answer that question. The difference between giving the right to a private corporation to build a canal and charge any toll it deems necessary, and the Government building it and charging no toll except such a toll as is necessary for actual maintenance; the difference between giving a private corporation, without compensation, the power to charge such toll as would give a dividend upon the original expenditure of $600,000 a mile and keep up the maintenance and equipment, and the power that would rest in the Federal Government if it built the works to charge just such tolls as are necessary for maintenance alone is so immense, in dollars and cents, that it is not worth my while to dwell upon it. Then I will ask this question in return: How would the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] regard a proposition that every steamboat traveling down the Mississippi River should pay a toll that would furnish a "fairly remunerative rate" of interest upon all that Louisiana and Mississippi and the Federal Government have spent upon the Mississippi River?

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Do you wish an answer?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. I would not regard that as at all comparable. How does the gentleman think that is comparable to this?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is exactly comparable; I beg the gentleman's pardon. To charge up the commerce of the Mississippi River with the cost of deepening the Mississippi River channel, charging all the commerce that is carried on its bosom with all the cost of deepening the channel of the Mississippi and charging up to the commerce passing out of the southwest pass the cost of that improvement; charge to Alabama commerce the cost of deepening Mobile Bay and the improvement of Alabama River, is exactly the same in kind as is the proposition that we charge up to the commerce of this country from the Lakes down the Mississippi a dividend on the cost of digging this canal. There is only a difference of degree and not of kind between deepening and digging.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Will the gentleman allow me to answer the question he has asked me?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought the gentleman had answered it.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. No; not at all. I said I would not favor a proposition of that sort. Why? The Mississippi River is a great natural waterway. The Government should improve its natural waterways just as much as possible, and I am strongly in favor of that; but I am not in favor of its digging artificial waterways between two States when it has not the money to improve the natural waterways it already has, and can not do it for seventy-five or a hundred years.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Speaker, my time is limited. The difference between a natural waterway 3 feet deep that needs to be 12 feet deep and a natural waterway no feet deep that needs to be 9 feet deep is, so far as I can learn, nothing. [Applause.] Your "natural" waterway from St. Louis down to New Orleans is no waterway at all, because it is not a waterway sufficient to float the commerce that must pass over it, and the gentleman from Louisiana and I have been here working for years and years in order to enable this so-called "natural waterway" to float the commerce that would pass over it if it were deep enough.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Was not that a fine waterway at one time?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not in my time.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. It has been in my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why, when I was a mere boy as a cadet at the Kentucky Military Institute I went aground for three days at Presidents Island, a few miles from Memphis, Tenn. It may have been a great waterway in flood times at some period in the past, but it has never been a waterway sufficient for the commerce of the valley in my lifetime. I apprehend the gentleman and I would not have been urging appropriations from the Federal Treasury for its improvement if it had been a fine waterway without further improvements.

Mr. SIBLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; I will have to give up this speech now and answer all questions from every quarter.

Mr. SIBLEY. I should like to ask the gentleman what he understood by the reference made by the gentleman from Tennessee to the "miserable bill we passed here the other day?" Did he not refer to the bill that is now pending in the Senate, which, it is reported, will have the unanimous support of the gentleman's party in that body?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I believe I will decline to answer that question.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will answer it, if you will give me a chance.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no; I fear it would take too much of my valuable time. If I had the time to yield, the gentleman from Tennessee could answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania to his own satisfaction and to the satisfaction of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and there would not be left a greasy spot of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. [Laughter.] But I have not the time. That is the only reason I do not yield.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the fundamental objection to this bill is that the Government of the United States, if it goes into the business of farming out river and harbor works to private corporations, will lose the only real advantage that there is in river and harbor work. Outside of the Great Lakes very little freight goes upon the rivers and canals of the United States, except when you get to international commerce. Even the great Mississippi River does not bear as much tonnage as the railroads along its banks. But still the great Mississippi River does an exceedingly valuable work, because it makes the railroads along its banks charge reasonable freight rates. Now, the minute you fix the waterways of the country, so that instead of being free, they are paying private institutions—run for a profit—instead of belonging to the Government belong to private parties whose interest it is to collect the utmost money possible, that moment you have done away with the only advantage in having deep rivers and canals and good harbors, and that is the advantage of reducing freight rates throughout the country upon the railroads. Of course I do not mean to include within that the foreign commerce of the United States, because in that there is no railway competition and the waterways actually do carry the freight. But my friend from Louisiana and I both know that the Mississippi River does not carry the freight of the valley to-day, and that although we have appropriated a good deal of money to it, the utmost the Mississippi River does is to carry slow-going freight, about the time of delivery of which people are not particularly anxious, and they must charge even then somewhat less than the railroads or else the business will go to the railroads.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. You say the Mississippi River does not carry the freight, and that is true, to some extent, but I believe it carries about 5,000,000 tons of freight per annum, does it not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; with all its tributaries.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. No; with all its tributaries it carries 29,000,000 tons. But does it not regulate rates? Is it not a powerful regulator of rates?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Absolutely. And the only reason why it is a regulator of rates is because the steamboat travels over it without paying toll. No canal that was dug, upon which the boats had to pay a toll, would be as good a regulator.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Would not this canal be a good regulator of freight rates?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; it would not.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Did not the Erie Canal regulate freights in New York prior to 1882, up to which time it did charge tolls?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; and I have already explained why it regulated freight rates then. But these canal incorporators under this bill are expressly authorized to charge railway rates. What are they? How determined? After challenge and litigation before the Interstate Commerce Commission. What immense satisfaction in that prospect. It was different with the Erie Canal system. The Erie Canal regulated rates because the State of New York based its toll charges solely upon the annual maintenance and equipment, and never undertook to get any interest out of the original investment. Now, then, you give to this private corporation the power to charge tolls, and you subject that power to charge tolls to only one restriction. What is that restriction? In the curious language of this bill it is that it is to be ruled by the Interstate Commerce Commission "as a railroad is." Isn't that curious language? Canal charges can, by Congressional permission, be equal to railroad rates.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. DAVIDSON. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has twelve minutes remaining.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I yield the remaining time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL].

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, so much time has been occupied in the discussion of this bill that I am compelled at this stage to confine myself to a few salient points. The provisions of the bill have been clearly and exhaustively stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin, the chairman of the Committee on Railways and Canals, who reported the bill. I believe that the provisions of the bill effectually protect the interests of the stockholders on the one hand and the interests of the public upon the other, and I shall therefore spend no time in the further discussion of that proposition.

If this canal be constructed, it will furnish the missing link in a continuous waterway from the Atlantic Ocean, the port of New York, by way of the Erie Canal and the Great Lakes and the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, to New Orleans, the Gulf of Mexico, and eventually, by the way of the Panama Canal, to the Pacific Ocean. It is apparent, therefore, that the bill proposes a great national enterprise, not in the interest of any locality or of any section, but in the interest of the people of the whole country—an interest which to them is of tremendous importance.

Now, in the first place, this is not a new project. In 1824, more than seventy years ago, the United States Government made surveys and examinations along several lines for a canal between the Ohio River and Lake Erie. It is true it came to nothing practically at that time, but it established the fact, nevertheless that the enterprise in its original conception was characterized as of national importance and national jurisdiction.

In the same year the State of Pennsylvania indorsed the work and appointed a canal commission to examine into the subject, and as a result of much legislation a canal was subsequently constructed by the State of Pennsylvania, as a State work, connecting the Ohio River with Lake Erie by the way of the Beaver. This canal was operated by the State until 1843. In 1843 it was sold to a private corporation, and by that corporation operated until 1869. It was then by that corporation sold, and by its purchasers abandoned as a canal; and on the bed of that old canal are now built two or three lines of railway at different points. It is therefore not a new project.

It is a feasible project. In 1889, as I have said, the State of Pennsylvania appointed a canal commission, and as a result a board of engineers made a survey of a route and reported that a canal could be built thereon. The legislature at that time appropriated $10,000 for the use of this commission, which was spent in engineering the project. In 1893 a provisional committee was organized at Pittsburg, composed of some of the most prominent and enterprising citizens, to inquire into this matter. This committee raised a fund of about $40,000 and put three corps of engineers into the field, with Thomas C. Roberts, a noted engineer, at its head. These engineers made a most exhaustive survey and examination of the subject, and after three years of investigation reported in favor of the feasibility and the desirability of a canal upon the lines laid down in the pending bill.

Their report was revised and approved by some of the most distinguished of our engineers. Gen. H. L. Abbot, of the United States Army, lately serving as a consulting engineer on the Panama Canal, selected by the French engineers interested in that canal; Prof. L. M. Haupt, selected by President McKinley to examine into the Nicaragua Canal, and Maj. N. H. Hutton, chairman of the board of engineers at Baltimore.

It is an old project, it is a feasible project; and now, after all these years of study and the expenditure of all this money, private parties come to Congress to ask permission to build this great national highway without the cost of a single dollar to the Federal Treasury.

It is said on the other side of this House that we have no power to create such a corporation. I will not stop to examine the cases. Every lawyer who is familiar with the case of McCulloch against Maryland knows that the principle was there settled that Congress has the right to exercise all the implied powers necessary to carry into execution the powers expressly granted in the Constitution.

One of the powers expressly granted in the Constitution is the power to regulate interstate commerce. A railroad, a turnpike road, a bridge, a canal, a telegraph line—all of these are instrumentalities of interstate commerce, and each and all of them may be provided for by a Congressional charter. The power has been many times exercised. By the exercise of it we built our great transcontinental railways and saved the Pacific slope to the Union of States. By its exercise we have built bridges over navigable rivers without regard to State lines, and by its exercise we are now in this very Congress taking control of the railways that are instruments of interstate commerce, and gentlemen know as well as I that there are many who now strenuously claim that the power of Congress under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution relates to corporations engaged in businesses that have not heretofore been connected in any manner with interstate commerce.

It is an old plan, a feasible plan, and a legal plan. Now, what is the necessity for it? The necessity for it is that we shall bring together two regions of this country of magnificent natural wealth, one the complement of the other, but separated by a brief space, a space however great enough to rob either region of the value for which it is dependent upon the other. Upon the shores of Lake Superior, on the one hand, are to be found the richest and greatest iron deposits in the world. They are of a capacity incapable of measurement, of a quality of the first order. On the other hand, adjoining the Ohio River at its headwaters are coal fields of inexhaustible resource.

There is more coal in the Pittsburg seam than underlies all of England. Not far off are the neighboring equally inexhaustible coal fields of West Virginia and Ohio. This is a region filled with blast furnaces and rolling mills and steel works and every conceivable variety of industrial enterprise. Is it not apparent that if you lay the Lake Superior ore region alongside of the Pittsburg coal region you will have the factors of an industrial sovereignty which will challenge the world to produce its equal? [Applause.] It is for the purpose of bringing these two fields together and attaining to commercial and industrial supremacy that the people interested in this project are desirous of building this canal. I will not dwell upon the figures that go to show how much there would be saved to the public in general by the lower freight rates upon a cheap and economical waterway. Time will not permit, but I want to impress upon this House that what the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] sought to suggest—that this is a local enterprise—is the furthest possible from the truth. A local enterprise! Is that local which will wed the Atlantic to the Pacific? Is that local which will make the great ports of New York and New Orleans neighbors? Is that local which will make possible a highway that shall include in its maginficent sweep the broad expanse of the empire State with the flourishing cities and towns along the Erie Canal; that shall include our great unsalted seas, with their growing municipalities from Buffalo to Duluth, that, reaching the Ohio and the Mississippi on their journey to the Gulf, shall wash the shores of fifteen great Commonwealths, taking tribute from the cities that skirt its triumphal way? Nay, verily, it is but part and parcel of that great well-recognized national scheme which contemplates such improvement of our natural waterways and such provision for the construction of others as shall ultimately make the bonds of our commercial union as indestructible as the bonds of our political union. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I now ask for the previous question on the bill to its final passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BOUTELL). The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks the previous question on the bill to its final passage.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A parliamentary inquiry for the information of the House, and it is whether or not there will be any opportunity offered for amendment of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That will depend on whether the House orders the previous question or not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the House orders the previous question there will be no opportunity for amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman states the situation correctly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope the previous question will be voted down, then.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—ayes 138, noes 63.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DALZELL. I would like the gentleman from Mississippi to listen to me. The gentleman from Iowa is very anxious to introduce a resolution with which, I think, the gentleman from Mississippi is familiar. Will not the gentleman consent now that we adjourn and take the yeas and nays in the morning?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I believe I am acquainted with the character of the resolution which is desired to be offered, and although I do not think the question ought to have been put up to me in just this way, just at this time, I can not find it in my heart to make any objection. [Applause.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILLIAMS rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was about to object, but I will let it go.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair wishes to be sure he understands the proposition and will state it to the House. As the Chair understands it, unless there is objection the completion of the vote upon this proposition will go over until to-morrow, when it will be taken up as unfinished business after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I did not understand there was any request for unanimous consent about the course of business. I thought I was merely acceding to the regular order, and I supposed the bill would go over, the yeas and nays having been recognized as having been called for, but I am not willing to surrender any advantages of position in regard to the matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair wishes to be sure he understands the proposition to which assent was given. If the point made by the gentleman from Mississippi is correct, the matter would go over as unfinished business until the next call of committees, and without further objection it will be so ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is right.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6052) granting pensions to honorably discharged soldiers who served in the Fifty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Militia Volunteer Infantry, and to their widows and minor children, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. SMITH of Illinois was granted leave of absence for two weeks, on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. KAHN was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Mary E. McKinnon, Fifty-seventh Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

By unanimous consent, Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of George Fusselman, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 12864. An act to provide for the purchase of certain coal claims in the island of Batan, in the Philippine Islands; and

H. R. 13104. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to revise and amend the tariff laws of the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1905.

DEATH OF EX-SPEAKER DAVID B. HENDERSON.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I have been directed by my colleagues from the State of Iowa to announce the death of David B. Henderson, late a Member and late a Speaker of this House. He died yesterday at his residence in the city of Dubuque, and I offer the following resolutions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa offers the following resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That this House has learned with the deepest sorrow of the death of Hon. David B. Henderson, Speaker of the Fifty-sixth and Fifty-seventh Congresses, and for twenty years a useful, faithful, and distinguished Member from Iowa; and that this House herewith expresses its appreciation of the services of the deceased as a patriot and statesman.

Ordered, That this resolution be entered upon the Journal of the House and that a copy be transmitted to the relatives of the deceased.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, as a further mark of respect to the memory of David B. Henderson, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is first on agreeing to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the resolution was unanimously agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs to the motion of the gentleman from Iowa that as a further mark of respect to the memory of former Speaker David B. Henderson the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Acting Postmaster-General, transmitting a recommendation relating to clerk hire for the post-offices at Goldfield and Tonopah, Nev.—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting a recommendation as to the compensation of the superintendent of the national cemetery at Arlington, Va.—to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, submitting an estimate of appropriation for allowances for salaries and expenses—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the vice-president of the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company, transmitting a report of the operations of the company during the year 1905—to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the chairman (on part of the House) of the Merchant Marine Commission, transmitting a supplemental report—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9165) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent to the Scandinavian Evangelical Lutheran Little Missouri River Congregation to certain lands for cemetery purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1787); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 15098) to authorize the President of the United States, in conjunction with the State of Texas, to determine and establish the boundary lines beween the Indian Territory, the Territories of New Mexico and Oklahoma, and the State of Texas, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1788); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BONYNGE, from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 15442) to establish a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, and to provide for a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1789); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SMITH of Texas, from the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14184) to extend the irrigation act to the State of Texas, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1790); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SMITH of California, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11490) granting the Edison Electric Company a permit to occupy certain lands for electric power plants in the San Bernardino, Sierra, and San Gabriel forest reserves, in the State of California, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1791); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. DIXON of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 15059) granting an increase of pension to Alfred W. Morley, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1715); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. LINDSAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14855) granting an increase of pension to Henry C. Carr, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1716); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. EDWARDS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14874) granting an increase of pension to William C. Hearne, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1717); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6110) granting an increase of pension to Abram W. Davenport, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1718); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14131) granting an increase of pension to Francis M. Simpson, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1719); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7951) granting an increase of pension to William H. Pitchford, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1720); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

A bill (S. 3401) for the relief of the executors of the estate of Harold Brown, deceased.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1668) for the relief of the administrator of the estate of Gotlob Groezinger, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BURROWS, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2742) for the relief of G. F. Tarbell, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4433) to amend an act approved August 3, 1894, entitled "An act concerning leases in the Yellowstone National Park," reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. KITTREDGE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3433) to amend an act entitled "An act to divide the judicial district of North Dakota," approved April 26, 1890, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2449) to create the western division of the judicial district of North Dakota for judicial purposes and to fix the time and place for holding court therein, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4513) to authorize the Mobile Railway and Dock Company to construct and maintain bridges across Dog River and Fowl River in Mobile County, State of Alabama, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

CALUMET RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. FRYE. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13365) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the Kensington and Eastern Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Calumet River," approved February 7, 1905, to report it favorably without amendment. As the time for the construction of the bridge has nearly expired, it is very important that the bill shall be acted on now. It will take only a second to pass it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to amend section 5 of the act so as to read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is expressly reserved; and this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the 1st day of February, 1906.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the bill (S. 3983) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the Kensington and Eastern Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Calumet River," approved February 7, 1905, being Order of Business 806 on the Calendar, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GAMBLE submitted an amendment authorizing the issuance of a patent in fee to Collin La Mont, a Yankton Sioux Indian, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

Mr. CLAY. I present two amendments to House bill 12987. I ask that the amendments be read, and that they lie on the table.

The amendments were read and ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

To amend H. R. 12987 by adding a new section, to be known as section 25, as follows:

"SEC. 25. It shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the interstate-commerce act to engage, directly or indirectly, in the business of buying and selling coal or coke, oil, or oil properties, or to promise, pledge, or lend its credit, money, or other property or thing of value to another, either natural or corporate, engaged in such business. It shall be unlawful for such common carrier or carriers engaged in interstate and foreign commerce to in any manner own, control, or have any interest in coal lands or properties, or oil lands or properties. It shall be unlawful for the officers of the carrier companies aforesaid, or any of them, or any person or persons charged with the duty of distributing cars or furnishing facilities to shippers either directly or indirectly to engage in the business of buying and selling the properties described in this section. It shall be unlawful for any common carrier herein defined, either directly or indirectly, to monopolize or attempt to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce in coal or oil, or traffic therein among the several States, or with foreign nations, or to limit or attempt to limit, control, or attempt to control, directly or indirectly, the output of coal mines or the price of coal and oil fields or the price of oil.

"Said carriers herein described shall not discriminate against shippers or parties wishing to become shippers over their several lines, either in the matter of the distribution of cars or in furnishing facilities or instrumentalities connected with receiving, forwarding, or carrying coal or oil as aforesaid: Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent such carriers from purchasing such articles for their own consumption.

"Any railroad corporation, or any officer or agent thereof, who knowingly and willfully violates any of the provisions of this act, shall for each and every such offense be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary for a term not less than one year or more than three years. Every violation of this section shall be prosecuted in any court of the United States having jurisdiction of crimes within the district in which such violation was committed or through which the transportation may have been conducted; and whenever the offense is begun in one jurisdiction and completed in another, it may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, determined, and punished in either jurisdiction in the same manner as if the offense had been actually and wholly committed therein."

To amend H. R. 12987: That a new section be added to said act, at the end thereof, to be numbered as section 26, as follows:

"SEC. 26. That the defense in all proceedings under the provisions of this act, either in behalf of the Commission or the shipper, shall be undertaken by the United States district attorney for the district wherein the action is brought, under the direction of the Attorney-General of the United States, and the cost and expenses of such defense shall be paid out of the appropriation for the expenses of the courts of the United States."

ELECTION OF SENATORS.

On motion of Mr. GALLINGER, it was Ordered, That 2,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 406, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, the same to include an article by Ex-Senator George F. Edmunds in the Forum for November, 1894, entitled "Should Senators be elected by the people?" be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

AMENDMENT OF PENSION LAWS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 1604) to amend the act of March 2, 1903, increasing the pensions of those who have lost limbs or been totally disabled in them, in the military or naval service of the United States, be rereferred to the Committee on Pensions for further consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent of the Senate, and I will state the facts before I state it, in order that Senators may know the object of the request.

The statehood bill comes up at 2 o'clock as the unfinished business. The junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] is about to leave the city, and he is very anxious to make some remarks upon the statehood bill. It would suit his convenience if the bill could be taken up immediately, to the end that he could finish his remarks.

My colleague [Mr. CLAPP], the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, is anxious to call up the bill to provide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory. It is a bill recommended by the Department and reported here.

Mr. HALE. That is the bill which was up yesterday?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir. If that bill is called up in the morning hour we could not finish it before 2 o'clock. What I should like would be to have the statehood bill called up immediately, to the end that the Senator from Illinois may submit his remarks, and then that it be temporarily laid aside without being displaced and the rest of the day be given to the other bill I have referred to, relating to the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to the arrangement, so far as the convenience of the Senator from Illinois is concerned in proceeding now to address the Senate, but I think it would be better to let the other matter stand until we reach it, and to see what agreement can be made afterwards, because the Indian tribal bill is a bill of very great importance, involving very many important considerations. It ought to be examined, and it will be pretty thoroughly discussed. I should not want to agree now to any arrangement that would give that bill any further right of way.

Mr. NELSON. Very well; I will limit my request. I ask unanimous consent that the statehood bill may now be taken up to the end that the Senator from Illinois may make his speech on the subject. Then at the close of his speech, if no one else wishes to speak on that bill, I shall ask that it be temporarily laid aside as the unfinished business.

Mr. HALE. We will arrange that when we reach it. Let the Senator confine his request to the convenience of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. NELSON. Very well.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection.

Mr. CLAPP. Before the request for unanimous consent is put, I wish simply to call attention to what I called attention to yesterday—the situation in reference to the condition in the Indian Territory and the importance of the Senate taking some action between now and next Saturday. I do not care what the form of the action is, but it seems to me it is important that the bill should be disposed of between now and Saturday. Before the request is granted I simply wanted to remind the Senate again of that condition.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator is right about that. I expect to vote for the bill. I see the importance of it. But I think the Senator sees already that it will be the subject of amendment and discussion.

Mr. CLAPP. I know; but the bill which was under consideration yesterday probably and naturally would have had the balance of the morning hour. What I want is an understanding, if it can be had, that at the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from Illinois we shall take up the bill. Of course we expect that it will be the subject of discussion, and very animated discussion.

Mr. HALE. Let the Senator propose that when the Senator from Illinois completes his remarks.

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly; I merely wished to state the condition now.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

H. R. 13842. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Eastern Star Home for the District of Columbia," approved March 10, 1902;

H. R. 14515. An act making it a misdemeanor in the District of Columbia to abandon or willfully neglect to provide for the support and maintenance by any person of his wife or of his or her minor children in destitute or necessitous circumstances; and

H. R. 14813. An act to amend an act approved March 1, 1905, entitled "An act to amend section 4 of an act entitled 'An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia,' approved February 28, 1901."

H. R. 15332. An act to incorporate the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

IMPROVEMENT OF ANACOSTIA FLATS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to submit to Congress a report upon the improvement of the so-called "flats" of the Anacostia River from its mouth to the District line, with recomendations and estimates of cost.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senate passed a bill in identical terms with the concurrent resolution. The House has changed it to a concurrent resolution, which I think was entirely proper. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the concurrent resolution as it comes from the House.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

THE STATEHOOD BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] asks unanimous consent that the statehood bill may now be laid before the Senate, in order that the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] may speak upon it. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12707) to enable the people of Oklahoma and of the Indian Territory to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; and to enable the people of New Mexico and of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. FRYE. Just one moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HOPKINS. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. I suppose, notwithstanding the fact that the statehood bill has been taken up in the morning hour, it is understood that it is to retain its character as unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not understand the consent agreement to affect its status as the unfinished business.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, the admission of a new State into the Federal Union is a matter of grave moment not only to the people who reside within the limits of the new State, but to the nearly 80,000,000 of people who live within the limits of the forty-five States that now form the Federal Union. No more important question, therefore, can be called to the attention of Senators than that of determining whether the bill which is now under consideration shall be enacted into law and the Territories of Oklahoma and Indian Territory be admitted as a new State into the Union under the statehood title of Oklahoma, and the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona be admitted as an additional new State under the statehood title of Arizona.

No form of procedure for the organization of a new State is prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, and Congress has not by statutory enactment prescribed a mode of procedure by which new territory shall become a part of the Federal Union. It is therefore left to the discretion of Congress in each case to determine the terms and conditions upon which the new Territory shall become a component part of the Federal Republic. Considerations which would control the action of Congress at one period in her national history in the admission of a Territory as a new State in the Union are inapplicable at another period. The growth and development of the United States has been such since the time of the adoption of our Federal Constitution to the present that no rule can be evolved and no precedent cited that can be of very much weight with Senators in determining their action with reference to the admission of these four Territories as two new States in the Union.

Why this is so I shall discuss more at length later in my remarks. It is enough for us to know, however, that, so far as Oklahoma and Indian Territory are concerned, they represent all of the element that entitle them to be admitted as a State. The two Territories have a population at the present time of nearly a million and a half. Their combined area aggregates 70,000 square miles, a State in area somewhat larger than many of the older States in the Union, but much smaller than States like Nevada, Montana, Idaho, California, and Texas. In area the State will compare more favorably with the States that lie immediately north of this proposed new State, like Kansas, Nebraska, and the Dakotas. The wealth of the two Territories is sufficient to guarantee a republican form of government and revenues ample under well-regulated laws to guarantee a good form of State and municipal government within the limits of this proposed new State.

The combining of the Territories into this one State is only reuniting a Territory that for many years was under one Territorial form of government. The one Territory is the complement of the other, and the two will form a State that is not only great in its varied resources at the present time, but is destined to rank as one of the great and splendid States in the Union in the future. I take it, Mr. President, that if the only question to be determined under the bill that is now under consideration were as to the admission of Oklahoma and Indian Territory as one State that there would be no debate in this body respecting that subject and no dissenting voice as to the admission of the new State. The consensus of opinion of both parties in the Senate and in the country at large favors the admission of the new State of Oklahoma as provided for in this bill. And the new sister will be welcomed with pleasure and delight by her older sisters in the Republic, and a warm and helping hand will be extended to her as she takes her place in the sisterhood of States that forms the greatest Republic of ancient or modern times.

The real controversy over the pending bill, as I understand it, Mr. President, is as to whether the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona shall be united into one State under the name of Arizona. There is a very sharp difference of opinion that exists among Senators on this subject as there was a very marked difference of opinion among the Members of the House of Representatives when this bill was under consideration in that body. New Mexico has a unique and very interesting history connected with the efforts of her people to be admitted as a State into the Union. The question of admitting a State into the Union has been considered more frequently as respects the Territory of New Mexico than any other portion of the United States which has from time to time been admitted into the Union of States since the formation of our Federal Government. It represents a civilization which antedates the landing of the Pilgrim fathers at Plymouth.

Before the Massachusetts colony existed as a political entity and before the Hartford settlement was made, there was a substantial settlement of immigrants within the present Territory of New Mexico who had gone there for the purpose of establishing a colony and founding a State. For more than three hundred years that settlement has been maintained in one form or another, and from the small beginnings of a few hundred Spaniards who went there more than three centuries ago, it has passed through various stages of development until it has arrived at its present status of population and civilization.

The people of this country have ever felt since the first time that New Mexico knocked at the doors of the Union for admission that New Mexico was not prepared for statehood, and that it would be an injustice to the other States which form the Federal Republic to clothe that Territory and its people with all of the privileges of an American State in the Federal Union.

The result has been that the efforts of the people of the Territory have not been successful. When the first claim was made for statehood the Territory combined within its limits the present Territory of Arizona. It was claimed that that Territory at that time was one harmonious whole, and that in area and population and wealth and all the other elements that go to make up a State it was entitled to recognition by the Federal Government and should be permitted to take its place as a State in the Union.

This demand has increased year by year, and some of the representatives from that Territory now insist that it should be admitted as a State independent of Arizona, and point to the population and wealth and area of the Territory as proofs of the reasonableness of their claims.

Mr. President, area alone can not make a State. Wealth alone should not make a State; and, indeed, Mr. President, area and wealth combined should not be considered factors that determine whether a Territory should be admitted as a State. The character and number of the people who inhabit this Territory is of controlling importance on the question of the admission of a new State into the Union. In determining a question of this kind we are not to look alone to the interests of the people who live within the limits of the proposed new State. We are to consider as well the interests of the people of each one of the forty-five States that form this Republic.

The legislation that is determined by the bill now under consideration is not of a temporary character. If it becomes a law by a majority vote of this Senate, it fixes the status of these Territories for all time in the American Republic. It clothes each one of these proposed new States with all of the rights and privileges, authority, and immunity that is now held by each one of the forty-five States of the Union. No one of the original thirteen States can exercise any different or greater influence in this body than either one of these Territories the moment that Territory is admitted as a State into the Union. Hence, as I have said, it is of paramount importance that every Senator not only gives great consideration to the interests of the people who are knocking at the doors of Congress for admission as a State into the Union, but that he should consider how such favorable action will affect the people of the several States that now form our National Government.

For many years the population of New Mexico was largely Spanish and Mexican and a mixed breed, where the Spanish language was the prevailing language, not only among the people generally, but in her schools and in her courts. I remember some years ago, when a bill for the admission of New Mexico as a State into the Union was under consideration in the House of Representatives, when I was a Member of that body, that the statement was made by one of the leading Members of the House, who had given careful investigation to the subject, that 70 per cent of the people could not read or write in any language other than the Spanish language, and that the percentage of illiteracy was ten times greater than the illiteracy of a State like Michigan or Iowa. I am glad to state, however, that there has been a decided improvement in the condition of the people of that Territory within the last ten or fifteen years, and that they have developed a school system that is giving ample facilities to the children of school age to acquire a good common school education, and that while interpreters are used in the courts and many of the transactions in business life are conducted in Spanish, year by year substantial gains are made, not only in education, but in the use of the English language in all the vocations of life.

It is my opinion, however, Mr. President, that New Mexico is not now entitled to admission as a separate State, and never will be, and in justice not only to the people living within the limits of the several States that now form the Federal Republic, but in the interests of the people of the two Territories as well, that if the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona are admitted into the Union at all, they should be admitted as one State, under the name of Arizona.

The investigation that I have given this subject satisfies me that the two Territories combined into one State will never make a State in point of population that will compare favorably with any of the larger States that are now a part of the Federal Union. In justice to them, I feel that if these Territories are to be admitted into the Union at all at the present time they should be admitted as one State.

The area of the Territories aggregates 235,380 square miles. This is a little over 77,000 square miles greater than the present State of California, but it is nearly 30,000 square miles less in area than the State of Texas. The number of square miles within the limits of the proposed new State does not fairly present to the Senate and the country the amount of the available and productive area of the proposed new State. It is located in what is known as the arid region, and thousands upon thousands of square miles of this proposed new State are barren rock and absolutely unproductive of anything that will sustain animal life.

Agriculture is the basic element of all wealth in any country. No State can be great and prosperous that has not agricultural resources of a rich and varied character. No State can be great unless it has agricultural and grazing lands in sufficient quantity to warrant a large and ever-increasing population. This the proposed new State of Arizona has not. She has mining interests that are supposed to be very wealthy and she has some territory that, by irrigation, can be further developed in the way of agriculture and for grazing purposes, but this is of a limited character.

I have called the attention of the Senators to the fact that this section of our country is the oldest-settled portion of the United States, that before the people of New England had started on the marvelous career that has made that section of our common country the most important and influential in the American Republic these Territories that are now proposed to be made a State had their settlements and the first elements of statehood planted within their limits. Had they possessed agricultural resources even as great as the New England States, they would have long since reached the condition where the Federal Union would have been glad to have welcomed them into the Union.

The new State, if it is admitted into the Union, will have 146,432,000 acres. These figures standing alone would indicate tremendous agricultural and grazing resources within the limits of the proposed new State. The records show, however, Mr. President, that less than four-tenths of 1 per cent of this great area is now under cultivation in any form whatever, either for agricultural or grazing purposes. In other words, out of an area of 146,432,000 acres there are only 585,728 acres that, after a lapse of three hundred years, are under cultivation in any form whatever.

Think of it for a moment, Mr. President. Here is a Territory which, as I have said, has been under the hand of civilized man for a period of more than three hundred years, and yet we find that of that vast area only 585,728 acres are under cultivation. Since the Government of the United States has embarked on the plan of national irrigation and has authorized the appropriation of hundreds of millions of dollars of money from the Treasury of the United States to reclaim lands for grazing and agricultural purposes the friends of separate statehood for these Territories claim that a large part of this now barren waste in New Mexico and Arizona can be reclaimed and made as rich for agricultural and grazing purposes as the valley of the Nile. Such claims, Mr. President, are easily made, but can they be substantiated by any facts of a substantial character to authorize us to adopt them in the consideration of the question as to whether the two Territories shall be combined into one State or not.

I am not willing, Mr. President, to take the statement of some person who lives in the Territory and has a monetary or other interest to secure separate statehood. I am not willing to take the statement of men who have only casually examined that Territory and whose ideas are not predicated upon a systematic and scientific investigation of this subject. Men can speculate as to the future development of these two Territories, and on these speculations can draw beautiful pictures of the teeming millions that in the distant future will be residents in these two States. But the cold facts destroy such figures and bring us to a realization of the conditions that actually exist in both of these Territories.

Fortunately for the interests not only of the people of the Territories themselves, but of the eighty millions who live within the limits of the various States of the Union, we have an abundant evidence upon this subject. Scientific men sent out by the Government to determine these various questions have made careful surveys and estimates in both Arizona and New Mexico. They have been men who have been seekers for truth, not to reject or admit either of these Territories into the Union as a State or States. They are men who have gone through and made these investigations from a purely scientific and statistical standpoint. What do they say regarding the future development of Arizona and New Mexico? The highest estimate that I have seen placed upon lands that can be reclaimed in Arizona by the most skillful development of the agricultural and grazing resources of the Territory, aided by the Treasury of the United States, adds to the lands already cultivated only an additional 877,250 acres within the limits of the Territory of Arizona; and in New Mexico, only 574,945 acres, an aggregate within the two Territories of 1,452,191 acres, or nine-tenths of 1 per cent of the area of the State.

These figures show, Mr. President, that of the 146,432,000 acres in the proposed new State of Arizona there will be under the highest kind of scientific development, after the expenditure of millions upon millions of dollars from the Treasury of the United States, only 1.3 per cent of this vast area that can be used for agriculture and grazing purposes. These facts demonstrate beyond question that if the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona are admitted as one State they never can have a population that will compare with the present population of such States as Ohio, Illinois, New York, Pennsylvania, or Iowa.

These States have reached their present respective populations on account of the agricultural resources of the States. As I have already said, the controlling factor in the greatness of a State consists in its agricultural resources. This proposed new State is limited, and so limited in its acreage that is fit for agriculture and grazing purposes that it can never support a great population. Illinois has only 35,040,000 acres of land within the limits of the State. It seems insignificant in number of acres, Mr. President, as compared with the 146,432,000 acres in the proposed new State.

But the statistics show that of this number of millions of acres in Illinois nearly 92 per cent are under cultivation. Nearly 33,000,000 acres of the 35,000,000 in Illinois are under cultivation. On the basis of land that is productive for agricultural and grazing purposes Illinois is greater than sixteen States of the area and character of the proposed new State of Arizona if we unite the two Territories and make them one State. The State of Iowa has an acreage of 35,856,000. Of that, 34,574,337 acres are under cultivation. In other words, Mr. President, 97.4 per cent of the entire State of Iowa is under cultivation, as compared with 1.3 per cent of the proposed State of Arizona, the greatest amount that under the highest scientific development can ever be put under cultivation. Is it just to such States as Iowa, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Illinois that this territory that never can have a productive area to exceed one-sixteenth of any one of the States that I have named should have its territory divided and admitted as two States with the same right to legislate in the Senate of the United States that any one of the States that I have named has?

I have not taken into consideration the mineral resources of the Territories and the population that mining will attract to the Territories. This kind of a population is more or less of a floating character. A mining camp of a few hundred men will develop into many thousands in a few months, and then a year or two thereafter may drop back to the original number of a few hundred, owing to the fact that the mines have been worked out. Nobody can estimate, of course, with any degree of accuracy just what the mining resources of those Territories are.

But assuming, Mr. President, that they are as great as is contended for by the friends of separate statehood, even then the population can never reach the population of any of the States of the Middle West at the present time. If these two Territories are admitted as a State, I doubt whether they will ever have a population as great as the proposed State of Oklahoma has at the present time. And certainly no man will contend that they ever will have a population as great as Ohio at the present time, or as Illinois, to say nothing of Pennsylvania and New York. All of the States that are in the Union now are advancing rapidly in wealth and population. No man can with any degree of accuracy determine the population fifty or one hundred or two hundred years from now that any one of these States will have within its State limits.

We do know, however, that the agricultural resources of each State are such that it can multiply many fold its present population. And on the same reasoning we do know that the population of the proposed new State of Arizona will be limited in number. If we are to maintain our popular form of Government and have laws and regulations that will enable citizens in all sections of our common country to exercise practically the same influence upon the destinies of the Republic, we should hesitate to give such a preponderating influence in the Senate of the United States to a class of citizens who propose to make their future home within the limits of these Territories that to-day are being considered for admission into the Union as one State.

Thousands of miles of railroad have been built within the limits of the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico and the mining interests have been developed in a remarkable degree, and yet, Mr. President, under the last census the population of Arizona aggregated only 122,000, and New Mexico only 195,000. I cite these figures to evidence the fact that mining alone can not develop any great population.

Some Senators may say, however, Mr. President, that the growth of these Territories has been retarded because of the fact that they have been kept under their Territorial form of government, and that if when New Mexico applied for admission as a State fifty years ago she had been admitted she would have long since multiplied by many times the population that we now find there, and that it would have been one of the rich and prosperous States in the Union. Statehood alone can not develop a population and can not develop the resources of any particular Territory.

We have a decisive example of this in the State of Nevada. That State has an area of 109,901 square miles and 70,336,640 acres—nearly half the acreage of the proposed new State of Arizona and twice the acreage of Iowa or Illinois. Nevada has been a State in the Union for about forty-two years. Of this vast acreage 2,000,000 acres are under cultivation or are susceptible of cultivation. She is more favorably located from an agricultural standpoint than the proposed new State of Arizona. Her mineral resources are as great as those of the proposed new State, or at least supposed to be; and yet what has been her development in population?

I find, Mr. President, that in the census of 1860 Nevada's population aggregated 6,857. She was admitted as a State into the Union in 1864. The census of population taken in 1870 showed that her population aggregated 42,491. In 1880 it had increased to 62,266. In 1890 it had fallen back to 42,761, and in 1900 it had still further decreased in population to 42,335. In other words, Mr. President, during the thirty years that intervened from 1870 to the taking of the census in 1900, the population had not only not increased, but had actually decreased in numbers. These figures ought to satisfy any person that a country that is dependent largely upon its mining resources for a population never can be accounted in population at least as one of the great States of the Republic.

The lesson that Nevada has taught us in this respect should not be lost upon Senators in considering the question of admitting New Mexico and Arizona as separate States. Unless they want to count mountains against men and give barren rocks the same consideration in the Senate of the United States as intelligent and high-minded men who are citizens of other States, they should hesitate long before they determine to admit these Territories as separate States into the Union.

As representing in part the 5,000,000 of people who form the great State of Illinois, I feel it my duty to protest against the admission of New Mexico and Arizona as separate States into the Union. The aggregate population of New Mexico and Arizona amounts to only 317,000. The same census shows that the population of Illinois was 4,821,000. It is claimed by the friends of these Territories that their population has vastly increased since the census of 1900. So has that of Illinois, Mr. President. To-day she has a population of more than 5,000,000. Her population has increased more rapidly than both of these Territories that now we propose to admit as a new State. If New Mexico and Arizona are admitted as one State under the statehood title of Arizona, they will have a representation in the Senate of the United States that will make one citizen in the new State the equivalent of fifteen in Illinois, nineteen in Pennsylvania, and twenty-two in New York. If they are admitted as separate States, as some Senators contend they should be, one man in Arizona would be the equivalent of thirty-nine in Illinois, fifty-one in Pennsylvania, and fifty-nine in New York. In New Mexico one man would be the equivalent of twenty-four in Illinois, thirty-two in Pennsylvania, and thirty-seven in New York.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I dislike to interrupt the Senator, but I know the Senator does not want to misrepresent anybody's position.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do.

Mr. FORAKER. I know the Senator does not want to misrepresent anybody on this or any other proposition. As I understand, there is only one proposition presented here by the bill as it was reported by the committee with respect to those two Territories, and that is not that they shall come into the Union as two States, but that they shall come into the Union as one State whether they are willing or not. The only modification of that proposition that anybody has proposed is that we shall not force statehood upon those two Territories unless there be a majority—a vote being taken to determine that question—in favor of joint statehood in each of those Territories. That is the only question. Nobody here is wanting to bring those Territories in as two States; nobody is wanting to do anything in opposition to the wish of the people except only to let those people vote whether or not they will come in at all at this time. The proposition of those who favor the amendment here is that they shall stay out until they are satisfied that they should be admitted as separate States or as one State, if they be willing to be joined in that manner.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, we can not be misled by forms. I understand very well the position of the Senator from Ohio, and I have examined the amendment he has offered—an insidious and dangerous proposition, as I shall show further on in this debate—but everybody knows that the Senator and other Senators who favor that amendment have been in favor of the admission of Arizona and New Mexico as separate States.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator's remarks about the character of the amendment I shall not undertake to answer, except only to say that I have not seen anything insidious in the amendment. I did not prepare the amendment, but I looked it over after a brother Senator had prepared it, and I introduced it. I thought it a perfectly frank, straightforward, honorable proposition, and if the Senator will point out that the amendment is in any respect whatever anything less than that, I shall be greatly obliged to him. If it should turn out that it is, in that event I would feel myself imposed upon; but I am sure that was not the case.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I do not mean any reflection upon the Senator from Ohio, because there is no member of this body whom I respect more highly. Perhaps the word "insidious" was not a very happy word to be used in that connection. What I desire to say on that point is that, in my judgment—and I will elaborate that a little later—this amendment is something that will not only defeat the bill itself, but will bring about what some of the residents of Arizona ultimately wish—the admission of that Territory as a separate State. It is one step, I think, leading to that result.

Mr. FORAKER. I sincerely hope that ultimately those two Territories will be admitted into the Union as two States. I think they should be whenever they are admitted. In one of the former Congresses, three or four years ago, I supported a bill which provided for their admission into the Union as two separate States. That bill passed the other House a dozen or more times—thirty times, I think; at any rate, a great many times—and it passed the House at that time. I supported that bill here, and I undertook to show then that, according to precedents, those Territories, notwithstanding the disadvantages of populations, to which the Senator from Illinois has called attention, were entitled to such admission. But that has gone by. I am not considering that bill, and no one else is. A new bill has been presented, which has passed the other House and has come to us, and we are dealing with that. The question is whether we shall now take them into the Union. The Senator and all who support the bill have the opinion that we should, otherwise they would not support it—that they are well qualified, being joined together, for statehood—and I being of the opinion that unless they are willing to come in and make one State—to be joined together—they should be allowed to stay out and remain Territories.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, it is very apparent from the concluding statement of the Senator from Ohio that he is not in favor of uniting these two Territories into one State, and that his position now is the same as it was two years ago, that when New Mexico and Arizona are admitted they should be admitted as separate States, and not as a joint State, as is proposed by this bill. To my mind, Mr. President, that carries out the statement I made, that this amendment, which proposes to submit this question to a vote of the Territories in the manner indicated by the Senator, is to defeat this bill and to hold this question off until such time as the friends of separate statehood are in the majority in this body, and then to admit New Mexico and Arizona as separate States. State lines should not be so defined that a man in one section of our common country counts for so much more in the Senate of the United States than a man does in another section. I am well aware, Mr. President, that when these considerations are presented to Senators and to those outside of the Senate Chamber who favor the admission of Arizona and New Mexico as separate States, they point to New Hampshire and Vermont and Delaware as being smaller States in area and in population.

Two wrongs can never make a right. If it was an error to admit these States into the Union and give them the same representation in the Senate of the United States that States like Virginia and New York had at the time of the formation of the Federal Government, as I am free to confess, Mr. President, in my mind it was an error, that error can not be used as a precedent to still further add to the wrongs upon the great States in the Union by increasing the number of States that must necessarily have a sparse population as to its territory and a small population as to number. The reference to these New England and Eastern States, Mr. President, is neither just nor fair. Every student of American history knows that the preparation and adoption of our constitutional form of government depended upon giving the then separate existing States equal representation in the Senate of the United States. The framers of the wonderful instrument, which has now stood the test of one hundred and twenty years, debated this question long and well and finally came to the conclusion that it would be better to give Delaware and New Hampshire and Rhode Island an equal representation in the Senate of the United States with the other States that were to be formed into the Federal Union than to have the then existing conditions continue.

The historian, Fiske, has called the period that intervened from the time when England recognized the independence of the colonies up to the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, which now binds the forty-five States in the Federal Union, as the "critical period of American history," and shows by facts and figures the demoralized condition that existed in the then separate States and the inability to meet the requirements of a united nation. The different States were rapidly, so far as the central government was concerned, drifting into anarchy, and had it not been for concessions of this kind we should never have had this glorious Republic.

Vermont, during the Revolutionary war, claimed and maintained a separate existence from that of New York, which claimed her territory. She furnished her quota of soldiers to fight the battles of the Revolution and did her full part in achieving the great victories over the greatest naval and military power of Europe, and it was meet and proper that she should be given, when she applied for admission into the Union in 1791 as a separate State, her position with that of the other colonies who fought the battles for independence. She was entitled on every principle of justice and equity to the same consideration that was accorded Rhode Island and the State adjoining her to the east—New Hampshire.

No such condition exists as to any of the territory that has since been carved into States, and no small areas of territory have ever been considered by any Congress since the adoption of the Constitution of the United States to the present time. When Kentucky and Tennessee were admitted into the Union as States they were potentially great States. They had the population and the territory, and the climate, and the soil, and everything that looks to great Commonwealths, and the legislators who admitted them severally into the Union were justified then, as events have subsequently justified their acts, in admitting them into all the rights and authority of independent States in the Federal Republic.

You must remember, Mr. President, that when these States were admitted into the Union the population of the United States was only about 4,000,000, and the disproportion between the population of the States that then formed the Federal Union and the new States that knocked at the doors of Congress for admission into the Union was nothing like what it is to-day, even by uniting the two Territories of Arizona and New Mexico into one State. In other words, Mr. President, with the population that is found in these two Territories, we are dealing more generously in admitting them into the Union as one State than we did with Kentucky and the State of Tennessee or any of the subsequent States that have been admitted into the Union, saving and excepting alone Nevada.

When the great northwestern territory was ceded to the General Government under the ordinance of 1787, Congress declared, so far as such a declaration can have any influence upon subsequent Congresses, that no small States territorially should be admitted into the Union. Of that great domain, an empire within itself, it was decreed in this ordinance that it should be subsequently subdivided into not less than three nor more than five States, and it was provided when any portion of the territory had reached a population of 60,000 that it should be admitted as a State into the Union. This rule that was adopted as respects the northwestern territory was a safe one in every respect. It was known when the ordinance was adopted that the territory comprised within its limits land of great richness of soil and wonderful mineral resources, with a climate unexcelled.

It was apparent when that great domain was ceded to the General Government that it was destined to be the richest and most populous portion of the American Republic. There were reasons existing then that do not exist now why the several States that were to be carved from this territory should be early admitted into the Union. People from all over New England and the East and, indeed, parts of Europe had already begun to migrate toward this favored land. It was to the interests of the Central Government that these people who extended from the settlements over the broad and fertile prairies of this vast territory should be early and securely attached to the Union. It was the hope and expectation of the great leaders of political thought in the young Republic that the Allegheny Mountains should not form the western limit of the new Republic.

They realized then, as we know now, that by furnishing every facility for the people within the limits of this Territory to form States in the Federal Union that they would secure all of this vast domain extending as far west as the Mississippi River as integral parts of the Federal Union. The stability of the Republic, its power and influence with foreign nations were augmented by the addition of each new State during this early period in its history.

Up to the close of the civil war our republican form of government was largely experimental. The addition of each new State was an additional guaranty of the perpetuity of the Federal Union and an additional argument for the consideration which it demanded at the hands of foreign governments. These considerations, Mr. President, were equally true when under the Administration of Thomas Jefferson we acquired from the first Bonaparte that magnificent territory known as the Louisiana purchase. Even as early as Mr. Jefferson's Administration there was talk of a Northwestern Republic that would absorb not only the States of Kentucky and Tennessee, but what are now known as the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, and those north and west, as well as south. The mouth of the Mississippi River was controlled by Spain.

The commerce that was carried upon the waters of that great river that originated in Kentucky and Tennessee and the territory north and west could not go unfretted to the sea under an American flag. These unfavorable conditions that balked the further development of our Republic to the west and the southwest challenged the adventurous spirit of Burr, and led to that conspiracy which subsequently resulted in his arrest and trial for treason at Richmond. Any person who will take the time and trouble to examine the States that have been carved out of the Louisiana purchase will note the fact that no State of small area has been formed out of that territory. They do not any of them possess the number of square miles that the new State of Arizona will possess if this bill is enacted into law. But they do possess a greater number of square miles of land that is fit for agricultural and grazing purposes. And they do possess populations in their respective States greater than that which Arizona will possess in all the future years.

In considering the admission of States that were formed from the territory included in the Louisiana purchase the 60,000 population that was considered by Congress in admitting the States formed from the Northwest Territory into the Union was abandoned, and the unit of representation in the House of Representatives was considered by some Members and Senators as the proper guide to determine as to whether the Territory that was seeking admission as a State into the Union had the necessary qualifications so far as population was concerned. The point that I desire to make, Mr. President, on this is that as new territory was acquired and the limits of our Government were extended to the west and the southwest that a larger population was exacted of the Territory that proposed to be admitted as a new State. No definite and fixed rule, however, has ever guided and controlled the action of Congress on the admission of any series of States.

In the absence of any provision in the Constitution of the United States looking to the territorial dimensions and the population of the proposed new State, it has been left to the sound judgment and discretion of each Congress that has been called upon to determine this question, and to either admit or reject the new State that was knocking at the doors of Congress for admission. We have now, however, reached the point where the admission of new States will not strengthen the Federal Government as in the earlier history of our constitutional government. Arizona and New Mexico are not part of the Northwest Territory and are not part of the Louisiana purchase. Hence, whatever rule may have been adopted in the admission of States from either of those territorial acquisitions can have no application to these Territories. They are a part of that great strip of country that was ceded to this Government by Mexico under the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo. While we stipulated in the treaty that the people who lived within the limits of this Territory should in good time become citizens of the United States and the Territory should be admitted as States, there was no time fixed when these Territories should be merged into States.

It is contended by those who are opposed to this bill that if Arizona and New Mexico are united into one State that it will be too large territorially to properly govern the people living within the limits of the newly organized State. I take it, Mr. President, that no person seriously considers an argument of this character. I have already shown what all Senators know—that the two Territories combined as one State comprise territory less by 30,000 square miles than does Texas. It is a little larger in square miles than the State of California, but it is more compact in form. And if Santa Fe is made the capital of the State, the people from any section of the Territory can reach the capital as easily as the people from southern California can reach the capital of that State, or the people living in the panhandle of Idaho can reach the capital of that State from that portion of Idaho.

Why, Mr. President, when Illinois was admitted as a State into the Union, the capital was fixed in southern Illinois. It was more difficult to reach the capital of Illinois from Galena and other northern portions of the State than it is now for any citizen living within the limits of the Territory of Arizona to reach the capital at Santa Fe or at any other point at which the capital may subsequently be fixed. There are now four great railroads that traverse this Territory. Others are projected, and if the Territories are admitted as one State, enterprising citizens will see that cross railroads are built that will connect the leading places throughout the length and breadth of this imperial State. To my mind the fact that the people live a long distance from the capital is no detriment. Very few people living in any of the outlying sections of either of these Territories at the present time have any business at the Territorial capitals.

Under a proper judicial code that will undoubtedly be established, State courts will be arranged for in all sections of the new State, so that justice can be administered in the locality of the various citizens in all sections of the State. The members of the legislature who annually or biennially are required to go to the capital are few in number and will have no trouble in reaching the capital of the State where they are to prepare and pass legislation in the interests of the people.

When once these Territories are admitted into the Union as one State, there will soon be developed a State pride that is so noticeable in Texas and California, where the people of those States under no circumstances or conditions would permit a division of either of those States into separate and independent States. The advocates of separate statehood for Arizona have made much of the act providing for a temporary government in that Territory, and have gone so far as to claim that if there is no legal obligation there is certainly a moral obligation on Congress to admit Arizona as a State under her present Territorial boundaries.

I am unable, Mr. President, to agree with this contention, either from a legal or moral standpoint. The Constitution of the United States provides, in Article IV, section 3, that "Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States." It provides also that new States may be admitted by Congress into the Union, but if the new States are formed from territory belonging to the United States, it does not indicate in what manner that shall be done, but leaves it discretionary with Congress to determine.

It is clear, Mr. President, that one Congress can not bind future Congresses on a question of this kind. And no statutory regulations enacted by Congress can override the constitutional authority to which I have here referred.

It is apparent then to every intelligent immigrant who settled in Arizona that the Congress that created the Territory of Arizona could make no binding stipulation on future Congresses respecting the manner in which that Territory should ultimately be admitted as a State into the Union. It is apparent also, Mr. President, that the intelligent immigrants there, if they knew anything about the Constitution of their country, knew that the constitutional requirements to which I have here adverted could not be modified or changed or overridden by any statutory law that might be enacted by any Congress. The language to which the advocates of separate statehood for Arizona refer and upon which they base their claim for admitting Arizona into the Union as a separate State is as follows:

Provided, That said government shall be maintained and continued until such time as the people residing in said Territory shall, with the consent of Congress, form a State government, republican in form, as prescribed in the Constitution of the United States, and apply for and obtain admission into the Union as a State on an equal footing with the original States.

This proviso taken by itself might give some color to the contention for separate statehood for Arizona, but that, Mr. President, is only a part of the first section of the act creating a temporary government for the Territory of Arizona.

The first proviso reads as follows:

Provided, That nothing contained in the provisions of this act shall be construed to prohibit the Congress of the United States from dividing said Territory, or changing its boundaries, in such manner and at such time as it may deem proper.

This proviso makes it clear that no assurance was given to the people of that Territory who were then living within the limits of the newly organized Territory or to those who might come after them that when the time came when that Territory should be admitted as a State into the Federal Union that it should be admitted as a State under its Territorial boundaries.

The language, you will note, Mr. President, is clear:

That nothing contained in the provisions of this act shall be construed to prohibit the Congress of the United States from dividing said Territory or changing its boundaries.

At the time when this act providing for a Territorial government for the Territory of Arizona was passed by Congress the legislators did not know as much about the country within the limits of the Territory as they do at the present time. So a specific statement was made that the Territory could be divided.

Or changing its boundaries, in such manner and at such time as it may deem proper.

This clearly indicates that the Congress that made this a part of the act providing for a Territorial government for Arizona, intended that whenever the people of that section of our common country should apply for statehood then the necessary qualifications of population, wealth, and area should be considered as an original proposition, unembarrassed by any legislation which had been previously enacted by Congress. So that, from the clear wording of the law itself, relating to the Territorial government of the Territory of Arizona, Congress is to have a free hand in fixing the boundaries of the State whenever the people are ready for statehood.

Now, it has been demonstrated by the action of the House of Representatives that that boundary should be extended to and take in New Mexico, and by the fact that the Committee on Territories of the Senate have concurred in that interpretation of the act. If Arizona is to be admitted at all, she should be admitted by extending the limits of her Territorial boundaries so as to take in the Territory of New Mexico, in the judgment of the House and of the Committee on Territories of the Senate. To my mind, Mr. President, it is entirely clear that bad faith can not be justly charged upon this Congress if the bill as it is presented by the Committee on Territories is adopted by the Senate without any amendment or modification.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCOTT in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HOPKINS. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. If it does not disturb the Senator, I should like to have him tell us what is the relative indebtedness of the two Territories. I understand that New Mexico has a very large indebtedness, while Arizona, on the contrary, has practically no public debt. This bill, as I read it, requires that the new State shall assume the whole indebtedness if we join together the two Territories. Hence, if the condition is as I understand it to be, that New Mexico is largely indebted and Arizona is slightly so, if at all, would it not be imposing a very grievous burden on the people of Arizona? I should like to be informed as to that.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, if the contention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] were a fact, it might cause the Senate to pause and regulate that so as to give an equitable adjustment of the indebtedness of the two Territories when they come as a State into the Union. But my understanding is that the indebtedness of both Territories is very small. I am not, however, as familiar with that subject as are others, but I have talked with Delegate Rodey, of New Mexico, and my remembrance is that the indebtedness of the two Territories does not differ very much; but neither has an indebtedness that would make any material difference if they should be admitted as one State.

I have given already many reasons why, to my mind, the two Territories should be united as one State if they are to be admitted at all as a State in the Union. The reasons that prompted Congress to create a temporary government for the Territory of Arizona were many and varied. The dominating idea that called forth this legislation was not, as is contended by some, because the Territory of New Mexico was too large in area to properly protect the interests of the people living within this section of the territory now known as "Arizona." Bancroft, in his history of New Mexico and Arizona, had made it entirely clear that there was one set of men at least who were active and vigorous in demanding a separate Territorial government for Arizona who were not actuated by patriotic motives and were not actuated by the needs of the people living within the then limits of New Mexico. They were lobbyists for office and were creating this Territory to make a governor and judges and other Territorial officers.

I shall not stop to take the time here to read what the historian has said upon this subject, because this matter has upon a previous occasion been fully discussed and these facts tersely and forcefully brought to the attention of Congress. It is enough, however, for me to show that at the time that this Territory was created there was much opposition to it.

Senator Trumbull, of Illinois, a man who for eighteen years represented my State in the United States Senate, was one of the most vigorous and able opponents of the creation of the Territory of Arizona—a man, Mr. President, of whom Illinois is justly proud.

Senator Trumbull, Mr. President, in the course of the debate on the question of whether a temporary government for the Territory of Arizona should be created, said:

> I can not see the necessity for creating this Territorial government, unless it is to find places for officers who are to be paid, according to the provisions of this bill, three months before they enter upon the discharge of their duties.

And on another occasion Senator Trumbull said:

> I desire to say a word in reference to this bill upon general principles, if I can get the attention of the Senate. I can not conceive the necessity for creating a new Territorial government in Arizona at this time. Who is demanding it? We have not control of that Territory. So far as it is under the control of anybody, it is under the control of the rebels; it is a part of New Mexico; and why should we create a new Territorial government for Arizona and a new batch of officers in a portion of the country where they can not go? Who is demanding it? I know that some of my friends have this feeling—there is some of this feeling, perhaps, in the Senate—that now we can create a Territorial government here and exclude slavery from it, and have the government all ready in a way that will satisfy us when there shall be a necessity for a Territorial government there. But I am not governed by such considerations. I want all the Territories to be free; and if this Territorial bill passes, I know it has a clause in it excluding slavery; but I am not to vote to create a Territorial government simply for the purpose of declaring that principle unless there is a necessity for the creation of the Territorial government.

Senator McDougall, of California, advocated the creation of the Territory upon the ground that there were large mining interests being developed there and they had no adequate protection. He claimed to be entirely familiar with that section of the country, having gone over it many times, and said that it was rich in mining resources. In other words, Mr. President, It was the mine owner who influenced the Senator from California to advocate a separate Territorial government, as it is the mine owner to-day on both sides of this Chamber that stand for and advocate separate statehood for Arizona.

It is reported that these interests are not only powerful in Arizona, but are of a controlling character. It was stated in the hearings before the House Committee on Territories and is claimed by residents of the Territory who are anxious for joint statehood that the mining interests combined with the railroad interests would control the vote of Arizona on the question of admission.

If this contention be true, and my investigation of the subject, Mr. President, leads me to believe that these two interests will exert a powerful influence in Arizona, we can see the significance of the amendment to the bill offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], which proposes that before any vote is taken on the constitution for the State or the election of State officers, that a ballot shall be submitted separately to the people of Arizona and to the people of New Mexico, and if either Territory rejects by a majority vote the uniting of the two Territories as one State, that that vote defeats joint statehood.

The friends of joint statehood are small farmers and the residents of the two Territories who represent small interests and are unorganized. The railroad interests and the mining interests are compact and organized bodies and can with ease concentrate their influence in either one of these Territories. Now, the records shows that the vote that is cast in Arizona at the times when the citizens are called out generally to vote aggregate something between eighteen and nineteen thousand votes. One mining interest alone, I am informed, Mr. President, has 10,000 employees and the owners of that mine are hostile to the uniting of the two Territories as one State. Anybody familiar with political elections knows what an influence the operators of that mine would exert on the miners to keep Arizona and New Mexico from coming in as one State.

In other words, if this amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio were adopted it would permit the railroad and mining interests to absolutely determine this question that affects the 80,000,000 people in this country. Now, I contend that this is not only unjust to the people of the proposed new State, but it is unjust to the people of the forty-five States of he Union, whose interests will be affected by the admission of one or both of these Territories as a State either jointly or separately. The amendment itself is wrong in this, that it neglects to consider the interests of the people outside of New Mexico and Arizona. They should have a voice in determining whether Arizona should be joined with New Mexico or not. If the Senator from Ohio desires to submit this question to a popular vote, why does he not provide that it shall be submitted to the people of all the States that will be affected by the admission, as well as to the people in the Territories. In all the history of our Government a proposition so antagonistic to the best interests of the American people has never been presented on the question of the admission of a new State.

I have already shown in my remarks, Mr. President, how Territories have been divided and subdivided and enlarged in their boundaries when they were admitted as States. When the most populous portion of Illinois to-day was taken from Wisconsin by an amendment which enlarged the boundaries of the State over that of the Territory of Illinois there was no submission of this question to the people of the newly acquired territory that became a part of the State of Illinois, or to those already living within the territorial limits of Illinois. It was never dreamed when States were being admitted in those days that such a queston as this, affecting the interests of the whole country, should be submitted to the vote of the Territory, where large mining and other interests could absolutely control and dominate the election upon a question of this kind.

To my mind it is a monstrous doctrine that a majority of eighteen or nineteen thousand voters in Arizona can absolutely determine a question that is to affect the weal or woe of this Republic. The people of Arizona have no more right to determine that question by a vote than would the people of Illinois by a majority vote have the right to determine whether Arizona should remain as a Territory or should be admitted as a State.

There is nothing in this position that has been assumed by some that there is a moral obligation resting upon Congress to admit the Territories as States under their Territorial limits. That has rarely been done, Mr. President, in all the experience that Senators and Representatives have had in admitting the thirty-two or three States that have become a part of the Federal Union since the adoption of the Constitution of the United States by the original thirteen colonies. In almost every instance the Territorial limits have either been enlarged or restricted to suit convenience and to suit the judgment and will of Congress. I know that that was true in Ohio; it was true of Iowa; it was true of Wisconsin; it was true of Minnesota; it was true of the Dakotas; it was true of Illinois.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do.

Mr. FORAKER. This is the second time that I have heard about the Territory of Ohio. My recollection is that Ohio never had a Territorial government except only as a part of the territory northwest of the river Ohio.

Mr. HOPKINS. That does not interfere with the statement I make, that when Ohio became a State she was carved out and taken from another portion of territory, that from which we have Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Michigan.

Mr. FORAKER. That statement of the Senator may be correct, but I understood the Senator to state just the reverse of it—that when Ohio was made a State it was by adding other territory to the Territory of Ohio.

Mr. HOPKINS. If I made that statement, Mr. President, I was not correct in it, because everybody familiar with American history knows that Ohio was a part of that great northwestern territory ceded to the United States under the ordinance of 1787.

Had Illinois been admitted as a State under her Territorial limits, her northern boundary line would have been south of Lake Michigan, and the fourteen northern counties now, including the city of Chicago, would have been part of the State of Wisconsin. This changing of the Territorial limits of Illinois, when she was admitted as a State into the Union, forms a very interesting chapter in her history. The Delegate who represented the good people in Congress was Nathaniel Pope, the father of Gen. John A. Pope of civil-war fame. When the Committee on Territories proposed the admission of Illinois, he recognized that Illinois, if she came in as a State under her Territorial limits, would have no commercial connection with the East and New England. Her great highways of commerce at that time were the Illinois River, the Wabash, the Ohio, and the Mississippi, and her great commercial emporium was New Orleans. There were no railroads then in the country and the commerce of the State was carried upon these rivers. The northern boundary line was south of the southern point of Lake Michigan, so that no commercial connection could be made through the Great Lakes to New York and New England.

This distinguished man saw in those early days the inevitable conflict between slavery and freedom, and he recognized the fact that if Illinois became a State in the Union under her Territorial limitations, that her commercial as well as her political influence would be with the South and slavery as against the North and freedom. And when the bill was submitted to Congress for the admission of the Territory as a State, he moved an amendment extending the northern boundary of the State 50 miles north to the center of Lake Michigan; thence west to the Mississippi River, including, as I have said, the fourteen northern counties, containing the richest portion of our State and the most densely populated portion of Illinois. He explained to Congress the reason why he made this amendment, and demonstrated to them that unless this territory that was mentioned in his amendment were added and a connection made through Lake Michigan and the chain of lakes with New York and New England, the new State would have no interest in the East, and that all of her commercial and political interests would center in the South and in New Orleans. The amendment was adopted. And it was through the members of the legislature of our State from this section that was taken from the Territory of Wisconsin and added to Illinois that carried a majority of the vote in the legislature and gave Mr. Lincoln his support during the crisis of the civil war.

It is said, Mr. President, that the people of Arizona ought not to be united with the people of New Mexico in one State; that they differ in their civilization, in their habits of living, in their business methods, and in fact that there is a hostility between the people of the two Territories that makes it unfortunate, to say the least, to unite them in one State. I disagree in toto, Mr. President, with this sentiment. And I claim that instead of this being an argument for these two Territories being admitted as two States that it is a most powerful argument in favor of uniting these two Territories in one State. What is the difference in population in these two Territories, and why should they be admitted as separate States? Why, it is claimed that New Mexico has a large population that is derived from the early Spanish and Mexican settlers, that they read and speak the Spanish language to the exclusion of English, and that if they are united with Arizona they will control the situation and retard the progress of the new State.

The census returns show, Mr. President, that there are more Americans in the two Territories than there are Mexicans or their descendants, and while if New Mexico is admitted as a separate State it might be a little questionable as to whether or not the American element would control, if they are united the American population in Arizona, combined with that in New Mexico, give the Americans a clear majority in the population in the new State and will enable them to control in all matters that affect the well-being of the new State.

To my mind, there is nothing that will influence for good so much these elements in New Mexico that is regarded as not a desirable element in her population as being united in a State where they must take on the habits and methods of the American citizen or be everlastingly relegated to the rear. They must wake up from the lethargy that has dominated and controlled them for years, that their ancestors have lived under for years, or they must gradually sink into oblivion in influence and numbers precisely as the American Indian has disappeared before the oncoming wave of the white man's civilization.

The experience in Illinois is a practical refutation of the argument that is made that the Spanish-American elements can not exist in the new State successfully. The southern portion of Illinois was settled by immigrants from Kentucky and Tennessee, from Virginia and North Carolina. They came there with all of the traditions of slave-holding States. Many of them brought their slaves with them, although the Territory, under the ordinance of 1787, was dedicated to freedom. The northern portion of the State, especially the fourteen counties that were taken from Wisconsin and added to Illinois, was settled by people from New England and the East—people who had been brought up to abhor slavery in all of its forms, and who looked upon the Southerners with great suspicion. These two elements met and commingled on the soil of Illinois. No greater hatred can exist between the people of Arizona and any portion of the population of New Mexico than that which existed between the immigrants from the South that settled southern Illinois and the immigrants who populated the northern portion of the State.

The strife was fierce and deadly in its character, and yet, Mr. President, that feeling never retarded the growth of the State for a moment. It really added to its marvelous increase in population, in wealth, in industries, and commerce. And so it will be in the new State of Arizona if these two Territories are united. This feeling of hostility that they now claim exists will stimulate each portion of the population to outrival in energy, in progress, in the development of all the resources of the State the other portion of the population in the State that they now call their deadly enemies; and we shall see in a few years a State where all classes will look back upon the uniting of these Territories as a blessing.

No Territory should be admitted as a State into the Union from this on, Mr. President, unless it can be satisfactorily shown that her population, if not now ranging 2,000,000, will soon reach that figure. We have practically 80,000,000 of population in the United States to-day. The Director of the Census estimates that by the time we take the next census, which will now be in a few years, the population of the United States will be 100,000,000 of people. The average population of a State, if this bill becomes a law, will aggregate, under that estimate of a hundred millions population, about 2,130,000 people. No friend of Arizona or New Mexico believes or will assert that either of these Territories separately will ever reach that population. Illinois to-day has a population of 5,000,000. She has a territorial area, soil, and climate that will sustain a population of ten or fifteen million of people, and she is destined in the future to reach this estimate, Mr. President, so that it is highly important to States like the one which I in part represent that these new States which are admitted should have elements that will enable them in the future to reach at least an average population of the States.

To show you, Mr. President, how this disproportion works in the States that are already admitted, I submit here the population of eleven States and Territories under the census of 1900 as compared with the population of Illinois, and the increase of population of these States and Territories in the aggregate and the increase of population of Illinois during the same period.

| Arizona | 122,000 |
| New Mexico | 195,000 |
| California | 1,485,000 |
| Utah | 276,000 |
| Colorado | 539,000 |
| Washington | 518,000 |
| Idaho | 161,000 |
| Wyoming | 92,000 |
| Montana | 243,000 |
| Oregon | 413,000 |
| Nevada | 42,000 |
| Total | 4,086,000 |

The population of Illinois in 1900 was 4,821,000.

The excess in favor of Illinois is 735,000.

The increase in the population of Illinois from 1890 to 1900 was 995,000.

The increase in the population of the eleven States and Territories just named from 1890 to 1900 was 989,000.

The excess in favor of Illinois in increase of population from 1890 to 1900 is 6,000.

If Arizona and New Mexico are admitted as separate States, these eleven States will have twenty-two votes in this body, while Illinois, with a greater population and showing greater gain in population, will have but two votes.

Illinois is increasing in population to-day more rapidly than ever before in her history. The same number of people in Illinois that are found in these States and Territories that I have named have only one-tenth of the representation in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do.

Mr. FLINT. I should like to ask the Senator if the increase in population has not been greatly in the cities and not in the country?

Mr. HOPKINS. In both. Illinois had increased in the manner I have said. But what I was about to say when interrupted by the Senator from California was this——

Mr. DUBOIS. I ask the Senator from Illinois if he has extended his comparison to Vermont, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, and Delaware?

Mr. HOPKINS. I have spoken of those States and shown how they became States in the Federal Union. The point I am making is that in the Rocky Mountain region, where such States as Montana, Idaho, and Nevada have two or three times the area that Illinois has, it is impossible for such States ever to have a population at all commensurate with that of the State of Illinois.

In this connection, Mr. President, I have been much interested in the protest against the union of New Mexico and Arizona prepared by a number of the leading citizens of the Territory of Arizona and printed as Senate Document 216 through the intervention of the junior Senator from Colorado. It states the reasons why these gentlemen sending the protest object to being united with New Mexico as a single State and then goes on to speak of the character of the population of the Territory of Arizona, its mining and agricultural interests, and its development of agriculture under irrigation. Then it speaks of the commercial and banking interests, the live-stock interests, and various other resources.

I suppose the object of having that protest and statement of the wealth and resources of Arizona published as a Senate document was to convince the Senate that Arizona possesses within her territorial limits all the elements of a great State. I have already shown in my remarks that only four-tenths of 1 per cent of the area of that Territory is now under cultivation, either for agricultural or grazing purposes, or, in round numbers, about 300,000 acres of land. The statement was carefully prepared by the protestants. It gives in detail the character of the work that is being done in the way of reclaiming some portions of the Territory by irrigation. The statement is made on page 6 of the pamphlet that—

> A quarter of a million acres are now cultivated within the Territory, served by many canals, whose combined length is 1,776 miles.

They show what streams of water are used in procuring this irrigation, making the aggregate area under cultivation by means of irrigation 247,250 acres.

Then, with an oriental imagination they speak of the future of the Territory and the land that can be reclaimed by means of irrigation in the future. One would suppose by a cursory glance over their statement that when irrigation has reached perfection in that Territory they will have a State there that will blossom like the rose, and the fabled richness of the valley of the Nile would be a matter of insignificance as compared with the richness of the agricultural development of this Territory under the irrigation system that is being now inaugurated and that will be carried on from year to year until the resources of the Territory are fully developed in an agricultural way. They have made an estimate, Mr. President, of the lands that they can reclaim by means of irrigation, and I think it will be of benefit to the Senators to read what they say upon that subject. They say, on page 7:

> It will be observed from the foregoing that nearly a million acres will be highly cultivated in Arizona, with the known water supply, by irrigation alone; nearly as much land as lies within the entire State of Delaware.

Here are men who have appeared before the two committees of Congress, pressing the claims of Arizona to be admitted as a separate State, and have made the strongest case possible to be made for the Territory, and yet we have the confession from them that under the highest character of development from irrigation there will be less than 1,000,000 acres of land reclaimed out of this vast Territory. This, together with the land that can be cultivated without irrigation, makes less than 1,300,000 acres of land. Think of that, Mr. President, in comparison with your own State of Indiana, or with such States as Ohio, Iowa, or Illinois, and then say, if you can, that a State that can not develop its agricultural resources beyond 1,300,000 acres should be entitled to take her place among her sister States and take the same power and authority in the Senate of the United States as is exercised by New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, or Iowa.

Suppose the State of Delaware, to which Arizona has been compared, were a Territory, is there a man west of the Alleghany Mountains who represents a State in this Senate that for a moment would consent to permit this small area to become a sovereign State in the Union? We all know that had she not been one of the original thirteen States, and had it not been necessary in order to secure our Federal Union to give her the rights and privileges in the Senate that New York and Virginia were to have, she never would have been granted that privilege.

Here, after more than one hundred years of our constitutional Government, when our population has reached more than 80,000,000, and when States that helped to form the Federal Union which had only a few thousand population then have increased to millions, it is proposed to permit a section of our country from the arid region, with thousands upon thousands of acres of barren rocks and of land absolutely unproductive of anything that will sustain animal life, all the rights and privileges of one of the original thirteen States.

They speak of the various resources of the Territory. I have taken occasion to call upon the Census Bureau to get something as to the agricultural and manufacturing resources of Arizona as compared with Illinois. I find that by the census of 1900 the gross agricultural products of Illinois for that year aggregated in value $345,649,000, while in Arizona they aggregated $6,997,000. The gross value of manufactured products in Illinois in the year 1900 was $1,259,730,000, as against $21,315,000 in Arizona.

So that in population, in wealth, in agriculture, in manufactured products, and in everything that goes to make up a Commonwealth, Arizona standing alone can not without great injustice to the other States in the Union be admitted as a separate State. We are, Mr. President, dealing most generously with the people of those Territories by admitting them into the Union as one State.

The following ten States have an aggregated population of 2,719,000:

| Rhode Island | 428,000 |
| New Hampshire | 411,000 |
| Vermont | 343,000 |
| Delaware | 184,000 |
| Montana | 243,000 |
| Wyoming | 92,000 |
| Colorado | 539,000 |
| Nevada | 42,000 |
| Total | 2,719,000 |

The following ten Middle States have a population that aggregates 36,641,000:

| New York | 7,268,000 |
| Pennsylvania | 6,302,000 |
| Illinois | 4,821,000 |
| Ohio | 4,157,000 |
| Missouri | 3,106,000 |
| Indiana | 2,516,000 |
| Michigan | 2,420,000 |
| Iowa | 2,231,000 |
| Wisconsin | 2,069,000 |
| Minnesota | 1,751,000 |

And yet the ten States first named have the same power and authority over legislation that affects the interests of the

In the name of those States I protest against the amendments that have been offered by the Senator from Ohio, which look to admitting Arizona as a separate State, if she is admitted at all, and insist that this contention for the admission of these Territories should be ended by uniting them in one State.

I am told by people who live there that the mining and the railroad interests are opposed to this legislation. They want to keep Arizona separate from New Mexico for reasons that they best understand. There is one mining interest alone that employs 10,000 people. That mining interest can almost dominate and control the vote, and if they unite with the railroad interests that are opposed to the union of the two Territories, they can defeat this proposed legislation against the will of the 80,000,000 people of the United States.

To my mind, Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio is wrong in principle. It is un-American. It has never been resorted to in the whole history of our country. No Territory that has ever been admitted into the Union has had one portion of the people living within the limits of the proposed State determine whether that State should be admitted as a State into the Union or not.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator does not complain of my interruption——

Mr. HOPKINS. Not at all.

Mr. FORAKER. I will state, if he will allow me, that we have never admitted a Territory to statehood in the Union without giving the people of the Territory a right to vote as to whether or not they will accept the constitution that was framed and come into statehood upon the terms and conditions prescribed. This is the first time in the history of the nation that the Congress has ever undertaken to do what it is doing here—to try to force two Territories long established, as these two Territories have been, two separate political entities, into joint statehood. It is the first time in the history of the nation that such a thing has ever been proposed.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, it is the first time it has ever been proposed to permit one section of a proposed new State to determine whether that State shall be admitted into the Union or not. It is the first time this proposition has ever been submitted to the Congress of the United States in any form.

I have just stated that the friends of the bill are not opposed to permitting a vote of the people of the entire new State. But the viciousness of this amendment is that if either the majority vote in New Mexico or Arizona is against the proposition, that defeats it. But that is not all.

Mr. FORAKER rose.

Mr. HOPKINS. Before the Senator interrupts me, I wish to suggest another thought that he may want to reply to. Under the amendment he proposes here this question of voting is to be considered within a limited number of days after the bill becomes a law. It is not to be taken at a time when the people are to vote upon a constitution and upon the selection of their various State officers, which would call out the farming population of the two Territories, but it is to be a separate and distinct vote in itself, that being the only question which is to be submitted. You can readily see, if the railroad and mining interests of Arizona are, as I am informed, opposed to joint statehood, how they can concentrate their votes and beat this, even against the will of the majority of the people.

Everyone who has had any experience in political affairs knows that an organized and compact body of a few hundred can beat thousands of voters who are unorganized. Take any of the outlying counties in these two Territories, and the voters would hardly wake up to the fact that they are entitled to vote on the proposition, but in the centers of mining interests and railroad interests they will have their votes as compact and regulated as under the discipline of a regular army. They will bring them there and vote against the admission of the two Territories as one State.

If the Senator from Ohio will amend the proposition he has suggested and permit a popular vote of the two Territories and let a majority determine whether they shall come in as one State or not, I for one will have no objection, and I think I speak the sentiment of the committee as well.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do.

Mr. DUBOIS. Was it determined in the hearings before the committee that the railroad and mining interests are opposed to joint statehood? Why should they be opposed to it?

Mr. HOPKINS. One reason, I am told on credible authority, is that the railroads pay about 9 per cent taxation on the value of their property at the present time and the mining interests about 5 per cent taxation, and the conditions in the Territory are such now that they have an advantage in that respect which they would not have if the two Territories were united as one State. That is the information which is given to me.

Mr. DUBOIS. How does this come about? Why?

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator from Illinois will allow me, it comes about in this way——

Mr. HOPKINS. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. The railroad interests and mining interests at present are able to dominate the Territorial legislature of Arizona, and if the two Territories are united into one State the power of the railroads and of the mining industries will be minimized, and they will not have the control or the power to control legislation that they have in this instance.

Mr. DUBOIS. Does the Senator think it would be any more difficult for them to control the legislature of this joint State, taking into consideration the population of the joint State, than to control the legislature of Arizona, admitting that to be a statement of fact?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir; I do; and I wish to state to the Senator from Idaho the reason why I think so. No protests in any shape that I know of have come either from the mining companies or from the railroads in New Mexico, while all the protests and objections and all the hostility outside—I speak of outside of this Chamber—come to us from people who are interested in railroads in Arizona and from people who are interested in the copper mines of Arizona. As the Senator from Illinois has well said, at the present time in comparison with other property these great industries pay the least possible of all taxes, and I know of my own knowledge that has come to me that their chief objection is the fear that if Arizona and New Mexico are united as one State they will have to pay more taxes than they pay now.

Mr. DUBOIS. If the Senator will excuse me a moment, do the railroads of the District of Columbia, for instance, pay a proportion of taxes equal to that the citizens pay?

Mr. HOPKINS. When the District of Columbia knocks here at the door to be admitted as a State, we will consider that subject.

Mr. DUBOIS. Do the railroads of Illinois bear a just proportion to the tax paid by the farmers of Illinois?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; they do. The Senator can make no point on that. The laws of Illinois are such that all corporate interests are required to pay their full shares of the taxes; and that is what we propose shall be done in New Mexico and Arizona if we can get these two Territories admitted as one State.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, this phase of the subject has attracted my attention, and for information I desire to put a question. I understand that one of the moving motives for a union of these two Territories as one State rests upon the apparent inability of the people, in their present condition, to levy just and equitable taxes upon all property in the respective jurisdictions. It is stated that in Arizona, owing to some question arising concerning the rights of taxation or the rights of railways, the taxation on them is very light. I am told that that light taxation was the result of a compromise. The railroads insisted that under their charters they were not obligated to pay any taxes at all. For the purpose of avoiding litigation and controversy I am told—and I will not vouch for the authority, because it comes in the shape of rumor and untraced sources—a compromise was reached, and under the compromise a tax inadequate in consideration of the value of the property is being paid voluntarily by the roads. The assessment in the Territory of New Mexico is alleged to be wholly inadequate as far as railroad property is concerned.

I wish to ask how it is expected, if these Territories or the people composing them are unable to justly assess property in a Territorial form, where they have legislatures elected by the people and governors appointed by the President, that their condition will be better by admission to statehood, where they will have a legislature elected by the people and a governor elected by the people?

If it is true that the Territorial government of Arizona has utterly failed in its duty to its people, then Congress may step in, as it could not in the event of statehood, and pass a law, without regard to the Territorial legislature, imposing just and fair and reasonable taxation upon the railroads. I believe if the suggestions thrown out in the course of the argument are true, that the people have so far fallen under the influence of corporate power in those Territories as to be unable to levy just taxation, it is the clear and unquestionable duty of Congress to exercise its constitutional right in the interest of fair play amongst the citizens of the Territory. Is not the condition, I ask, better for the people of the Territories to-day with the power in Congress than it would be by a complete surrender of Congressional control through the establishment of a State government?

Mr. NELSON rose.

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator from Montana entirely begs the question. The fact that these great corporate bodies—the mining companies and the railroads—pay an insufficient amount of tax is not the moving reason for advocating the proposition to unite the two Territories into one State. The true reason why we want this action is this. We know from past experience in this Hall that three years ago they came in here knocking for separate statehood. Arizona and New Mexico together with Oklahoma and the Indian Territory came, and we know now that gentlemen who at that time assumed that those Territories were each of them competent and qualified for distinct statehood come now and say we do not want statehood at all. Their argument at this session, if there be anything in it, is that they are not asking for admission now; that they are not qualified for it; "leave us out a little longer, and by and by, in the near future, we may be ready for it."

Whenever Senators deem it necessary to disorganize these Territories or pass any legislation, as the Senator suggested, we will be ready to meet that question. But the question to-day is whether these two Territories should not be united into one State. In their make-up and their characteristics, in their natural resources and their population, ought they not to be one State instead of two weak, sickly States, with a scattering and feeble population?

New Mexico has to-day, if you eliminate the Indian population, hardly 200,000 white people; and if you eliminate the Mexicans from that number there are, perhaps, about 100,000 Americans there. Arizona to-day has a population, after all these years of Territorial existence, if you eliminate the Indians out of it, of only about 100,000 white people, or about enough for half of the ratio of a Representative in Congress.

Taking the two Territories—the one, New Mexico, nearly 60 years of age, and Arizona—the two together have a white population in round numbers of only about 300,000 people.

After all these years, if all that country, with all that immense domain, can only make such a showing, why in the world should we segregate them and make them into separate Commonwealths simply because of the vast territorial area? The statistics show that in Arizona there are only about a million and a half acres of land that are irrigated or possible of irrigation, for the reason so well and so fully explained by the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. DICK] in his remarks yesterday, that the amount of land in forest reserves is somewhere in round numbers, if I recall the figures, about 10,000,000 acres. Take the two combined. Take the lands that are irrigated and capable of irrigation and take the forest reserves, the two combined amount only to about 12,000,000 acres, or less than 12,000,000 acres.

Now, for the purposes of statehood it is not the outer boundaries of the Territory or the towns, but only that portion of the Territory that is capable to maintain a permanent population of agriculturists by grazing and farming that we ought to take into consideration. As the Senator from Illinois said a moment ago, mining camps are fluctuating and floating. We have instances of that in Alaska. We have instances of that in the early history of Arizona. Town mining camps and town mines in Arizona existed over fifty years ago, and they are now a thing of the past; you can hardly find a stone or a monument where those mining towns existed.

You can never build up a permanent State with mining industries or mining camps alone. There must be some agricultural resources back of it. Take the great State of Montana, which my friend the Senator to my right represents so ably on this floor. In spite of its magnificent mining development and industry Montana will be a great State, because in the future it will be a great agricultural and grazing State.

Mr. HALE rose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. Only for a question. Has it occurred to the Senator in what he is saying, and what I think impresses other Senators, as has the speech of the Senator from Illinois, and the very lucid and admirable speech of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DICK] yesterday, that the logical conclusion is that we ought not to admit these two Territories at all? We are going very far, and I am afraid too far, considering all the conditions, in admitting these two Territories as one State. I think the wiser thing would be to let them remain where they are.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, there is some force in the position suggested by the Senator from Maine, but we do know that one political party in this country stands now for the admission of those two Territories as separate States.

Mr. HALE. I do not mean to say that I will not vote for this proposition at all, because it may be the best in the emergency, but the logic, the figures, the conditions are all against admitting these two sparse, stray Territories as States.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yet, Mr. President, for fifty years these Territories have been seeking admission as a State; and I think it is the consensus of opinion that it would be wiser to end that by admitting them as one State than to defer action.

Mr. HALE. Quite likely.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, in response to the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], and in addition to what has already been said by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], I desire to say that another argument in favor of admitting these Territories as one State is because the mining and the railroad interests are against the proposition. The Senator from Montana intimated in his question to me that if they could not be controlled in a Territorial way they could not be controlled as a separate State. Evidently those who control the mines and the railroads think differently from the Senator from Montana, because, as I understand it, they are united in their opposition.

But, Mr. President, my opposition to these Territories as separate States comes from the fact that a gross injustice would be done to the other States in the Union.

Mr. CARTER. Before the Senator——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do.

Mr. CARTER. Before the Senator addresses himself to the phase of the question to which he is about to advert, I desire to say one word in reference to the reply of the Senator from Minnesota. I am happy to hear from him that this oft-repeated argument with reference to the inequalities of taxation in the Territories and, therefore, the failure of the people, partially at least, to administer government when given the opportunity is not to be considered in the argument of the case as a moving motive for this proposed union. The Senator, on the contrary——

Mr. NELSON. Nor is it to be considered as an argument against it.

Mr. CARTER. Not at all.

Mr. HOPKINS. I propose to conclude in a few minutes. Will the Senator allow me to conclude my remarks?

Mr. CARTER. I will detain the Senator but one moment. I will join in righting the wrong, if wrong exists, through the oversight or inability of the legislatures of those Territories to do full justice in the matter of taxation. The matter of population and agricultural area, says the Senator, constitute the real points to be considered. I observe that the population of Illinois, when it was admitted, was only 34,000 people. I do not know what proportion 34,000 bore to the population of the State of New York at that time.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, that has no bearing on this question whatever. When Illinois was admitted as a State into the Union everybody knew that from her soil and climate and her location she was even then potentially a great State, and that in a few years she would have what she has to-day, 5,000,000 people. But if I have said anything in effect at all to-day it is to show that this new State will never have a population commensurate with that of Illinois at the present time.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield further to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CARTER. In view of the desire of the Senator to conclude his remarks I shall not further interrupt him or insist on answering further his questions.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. HOPKINS. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I expect to vote on the same side of this question with the Senator from Illinois, but I do not think that I sympathize with the idea which he seems to have that the admission of this State would be an injustice to the large States. If that injustice consists in the fact that these States would be small States and there ought to be no States in the Union except large and important States, I think I am not in entire sympathy with him. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I can appreciate what the Senator says, and I can say to the Senator that if Rhode Island had not been one of the original thirteen States that formed the Republic and had not taken so conspicuous a part in gaining independence and came to-day knocking at the doors of Congress for separate statehood, I would oppose it. But in my remarks earlier in the day I pointed out the difference that Rhode Island, New Hampshire, and such States hold to the Union from the States proposed to be admitted into the Union at the present time. The fathers of the Republic never contemplated that there should be such a disproportion in the population of the States as the years have developed. The experience we have gained from these years should teach us that we should have no more Rhode Islands in population or in territorial area, but that we should compel those States——

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is undoubtedly very fortunate for Rhode Island that the Senator from Illinois was not one of the fathers of the Republic. [Laughter.]

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PERKINS. I have not interrupted my friend during his very able discussion of this question, and I do not expect to vote on his side unless convinced by his argument. The whole trend of it is that if Arizona has great agricultural resources that may be developed, then she is entitled to Statehood. I want to say to my friend from Illinois that when California was admitted as a State into the Union, and for many years thereafter, she was obliged to import her flour from Chile and bring it from Oregon to support the people who lived in that State. She was obliged to import her dairy products and, indeed, almost every article of food except that which came from cattle and sheep which roamed over the plains and hills of that State. To-day, we are exporting 1,000,000 tons per annum of wheat, feeding the crowned prince and the pauper alike in European countries. We are sending to Illinois, Rhode Island, and other States 30,000 carloads per annum of citrus fruit, a luxury which they would not indulge in were it not for California. We are producing olive oil in large quantities, and since the pure-food bill has passed cotton-seed oil will not be sold in the future for olive oil. We are sending raisins and currants, California being the only State in the Union that produces them. So I might go on and enumerate the products of California. I believe that Arizona is as capable to-day of developing those great agricultural and horticultural and viticultural resources as was the State of California.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, the Senator from California is a more credulous individual than I had taken him to be. When California was admitted as a State into the Union it was recognized by those who were familiar with her soil and her climate that she was destined to be one of the great States of the Republic; and while they were in the early days developing their mineral resources to the disadvantage of the agricultural resources of the State the far-sighted men who were willing to take her by the hand and recognize her as a sister State in the Republic knew full well that by the time the years had developed my friend here to represent that State in the Senate of the United States she would be just such a prosperous and glorious State as he has described.

But, Mr. President, that can not be true of Arizona. We have had the scientific investigations there that show that Arizona never can be the State that California is. California to-day has a population of more than 1,500,000 people. The population of Arizona, according to the last census, was 122,000. She never will have a population of a million. It is an arid region. She can not produce the fruits and she can not produce the agricultural products that California produces.

But, Mr. President, when I was interrupted by my genial friend from that great State I was about to call to the attention of Senators the fact that since the early days this disproportion among the States has been growing, as compared with the New England States. That has been sought to be met by Congress from time to time by enlarging the territorial limits of the State. You will find that from the time that the Northwestern Territory was divided into States each one of the States farther west than those carved out of that great domain has been larger in area, with the hope that they would develop as California has developed, and that they would have a population of a character and number that would be so that no injustice would be worked upon States like New York, Pennsylvania, and Illinois.

I regret to say, Mr. President, that during the debates which have been had upon the question of the admission of New Mexico and Arizona as a single State in this Chamber, I have observed a feeling of sectionalism that I deplore. Senators from some of the sparsely settled States of the West seem to think that it is necessary to admit Arizona and New Mexico as separate States in order to checkmate or balance the influence of the small New England States.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do.

Mr. CARTER. I think at that point it is but just to interpose the observation that the vote of western Senators upon this floor is divided and will be divided when the votes are counted, and that there is no unanimity of sentiment on this question.

Mr. HOPKINS. I realize that.

Mr. CARTER. Nor is there any suggestion or thought of evading it.

Mr. HOPKINS. I was not applying that to the entire West. I said some Senators.

Such a feeling I think, Mr. President, is unfortunate to be in existence in the country and unfortunate to receive any recognition in this Chamber. We are one country working for one great end, the glory and perpetuity of the Republic itself. There may be interests in New England that call for action upon the part of the Senators from that section that are unknown in the far West, and we know that there are interests in the West that are not fully appreciated, at least as we think, by the New England Senators

But, Mr. President, the great States of the Middle West that have contributed their populations and wealth to the development of this country ought not to be ground to pieces between the upper and the nether millstones of the West and the East, the Western States and the New England States.

I have shown that since the Government embarked upon the plan of admitting new States in the Union that Congress has required larger areas than we find in any of the New England States that helped to form the Federal Union, and they are States that have through their soil and climate and mineral resources given earnest of populous and great States in the near future when they were respectively admitted into the Union. In every instance this expectation has been realized excepting in the admission of the State of Nevada, and all people know that that State was admitted through a seeming political exigency. I think it was understood when Nevada became a State that the purposes for her admission as a State in the Union were political rather than an expectation that she would become one of the populous and wealthy States in the Union.

The reason, Mr. President, that the New England States have always exerted a powerful influence upon the legislation of the country is not because of the number of her Senators so much as the fact that the people of that section of our common country have realized from the first that to exert an influence in this body a man must be kept here term after term. In no place in this country does length of service and experience count for so much as it does in the Senate of the United States. I care not how brilliant a man may be or what section of the country he represents, if he comes here as a new man he goes to the foot of the committees and the legislation is shaped by men of longer experience, even if of less ability. A notable example of this, Mr. President, occurred during my service in the House. William M. Evarts, in his day and generation, I think, was the leader of the American bar, a man of great learning, of great eloquence, and of great ability. Before he came to the Senate he had been the Attorney-General of the United States and had held the exalted position of Secretary of State under the Hayes Administration for four years.

With all this learning and this varied experience, when he came from the Empire State as a Member of this body he was put at the foot of the Republican membership on the Committee on the Judiciary, while the little State of Vermont, with a population probably not as great in numbers as one ward in the city of New York, held the chairmanship of that committee and dominated the legislation that emanated from that committee. Had Mr. Evarts entered this Chamber from the State of New York in his earlier manhood had been kept here, as the New England Senators are, as a rule, he would have undoubtedly been a dominating and controlling personage in this body.

To show that the West is not discriminated against in the way of positions on committees in this body, when the service of the Senators warrant it, I have only to call your attention to the State of Wyoming.

The census of 1900 gives that State a population of 92,000, and yet her people have had the good sense and good fortune to keep her Senators here from term to term, until to-day the senior Senator is chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs and the junior Senator is chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary. And I submit, Mr. President, that these Senators from the West who are restive because the larger and more important committees of this body are controlled by the East and New England, ought to appeal to their people to keep them here as the people of Wyoming have kept their Senators, until through length of service they can acquire an influence in this body that will protect the Rocky Mountain region without perpetrating such an injustice against the great Middle West, as the admission of Arizona and New Mexico would be if admitted as separate States.

Mr. CARTER. I venture to say that upon the matter of the advisability of continuity of service in this body there will not be found a dissenting opinion. [Laughter.]

DAMS AND POWER STATIONS ON THE TENNESSEE RIVER.

During the delivery of Mr. HOPKINS's speech,

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I believe that 2 o'clock has arrived.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. HOPKINS. Certainly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. MORGAN. I merely called attention to the fact that the hour of 2 o'clock had arrived, and I believe the morning hour has expired.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would state that under the unanimous-consent agreement this morning, made at the request of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], the statehood bill, which is the unfinished business, was laid before the Senate before the close of the routine business. That is now the unfinished business.

Mr. MORGAN. Having been necessarily absent from the Senate on committee duty, I was not aware of that arrangement. I will now ask the courtesy of the Senate that the President of the Senate may lay before the body a concurrent resolution of the House that I may have it acted on, as I have only a very few moments in which I can address myself to that subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
February 23, 1906.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the action of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and of the Vice-President of the United States and the President of the Senate in signing the enrolled bill H. R. 297—"An act to authorize the construction of dams and power stations on the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals, Alabama"—be rescinded, and that in the reenrollment of the bill the following amendments be made:

Amend section 1 of the enrolled bill by striking out, after the word "elect," at the end of line 5, section 1, page 1, the following: "between the mouth of Malletts Creek on the east, and," in line 6 of said section and insert in lieu thereof "and the Secretary of War may approve, between a point on the southern side of the river opposite to or below the head or opening of the canal constructed by the United States on the north side of the river, on the east, and." Insert after the word "river," in line 10 of said section 1, page 1, the following: "between the two points above mentioned."

Amend by adding, after the word "war," in line 13, of said section 1, page 1, of said enrolled bill, the following: "for the protection of navigation and the property and other interests of the United States;" so that said section 1 of the enrolled bill when amended will read as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That any person, company, or corporation having authority therefor under the laws of the State of Alabama may hereafter erect, maintain, and use a dam or dams in or across the Tennessee River, in the State of Alabama, at such points at Muscle Shoals as they may elect, and the Secretary of War may approve, between a point on the southern side of the river opposite to or below the head or opening of the canal constructed by the United States on the north side of the river, on the east, and the western line of section 16, township 3, range 10, on the west, for the purpose of erecting, operating, and maintaining power station and to maintain inlet and outlet races or canals and to make such other improvements on the southern bank of the Tennessee River, between the two points above mentioned, as may be necessary for the development of water power and the transmission of the same, subject always to the provisions and requirements of this act and to such conditions and stipulations as may be imposed by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War for the protection of navigation and the property and other interests of the United States."

Amend section 2, page 1, of said enrolled bill by striking out, after the word "canal," in line 25, page 1, of said section, all down to and including the word "river," in line 25 of said section 2.

Amend said section 2, page 1, of the enrolled bill, by striking out, after the word "canal," in line 28, page 1, all down to and including the word "river," in line 29 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "or the Tennessee River;" so that said section 2 of the enrolled bill as amended will read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That detailed plans for the construction and operation of a dam or dams and other appurtenant and necessary works shall be submitted by the person, company, or corporation desiring to construct the same to the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, with a map showing the location of such dam or other structures with such topographical and hydrographic data as may be necessary for a satisfactory understanding of the same, which must be approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War before work can be commenced on said dam or dams or other structures; and after such approval of said plans, no deviation whatsoever therefrom shall be made without first obtaining the approval of the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War: Provided, That the constructions hereby authorized do not interfere with the navigation of Muscle Shoals Canal or the navigation of the Tennessee River: And provided further, That said dam or dams and works shall be limited only to the use of the surplus water of the river not required for the navigation of the Muscle Shoals Canal or the Tennessee River, and that no structures shall be built and no operations conducted by those availing themselves of the provisions of this act which shall injure or interfere with the navigation of the Muscle Shoals Canal or impair the usefulness of any improvement made by the Government in the interest of navigation."

Amend section 3, page 2, of said enrolled bill, by striking out all after the word "otherwise," in line 17 of said section 3, page 2, down to and including the word "damage" at the end of line 18 of said section and page, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "in a court of competent jurisdiction;" so that said section 3 of said enrolled bill after being so amended will read:

"SEC. 3. That the Government of the United States reserves the right, at any time that the improvement of the navigation of the Tennessee River demands it, to construct, maintain, and operate, in connection with any dam or other works built under the provisions of this act, suitable lock or locks or any other structures for navigation purposes, and at all times to control such dam or dams or other structures, and the level of the pool caused by such dam or dams, to such an extent as may be necessary to provide facilities for navigation; and whenever Congress shall authorize the construction of such lock or other structures, the person, company, or corporation owning and controlling such dam or dams or other structures shall convey to the United States, under such terms as Congress shall prescribe, titles to such land as may be required for the use of such lock and approaches, and in addition thereto shall grant to the United States, free of cost, the free use of water power for building and operating such constructions: Provided also, That the person, company, or corporation building, maintaining, or operating any dam or dams or other structures under the provisions of this act shall be liable for any damage that may be inflicted thereby upon private property, either by overflow or otherwise, in a court of competent jurisdiction. The person, company, or corporation owning or operating any such dam shall maintain, at their own expense, such lights and other signals thereon and such fishways as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall prescribe."

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, it is impossible for any Senator to gather from the reading of this paper what is sought to be effectuated. I have very great doubt whether this is the proper way of curing what the Senator believes is a defect in the statute as passed, and I must ask, in order to give Senators an opportunity of examining it, that the matter go over until to-morrow.

Mr. MORGAN. If the request of the Senator shall be acceded to—to which I have no objection—I want the Senate to understand this whole matter fully, so I will ask that the concurrent resolution be printed in the RECORD, so that all Senators may have an opportunity of seeing it.

Mr. HALE. Yes; I think that ought to be done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution has been read, and therefore will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HALE. Now the concurrent resolution will go over, as I understand.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Alabama where the measure originated?

Mr. MORGAN. It originated in the House of Representatives. It passed the Senate, was carried to the President, and was investigated by him very carefully indeed, and by the Secretary of War. The Secretary of War made some objections to some provisions of the bill, one of which had been purely accidental in the description of the location, of the locus in quo. The Secretary of War came to see me in this Chamber, and suggested that I should offer a concurrent resolution that the bill be recalled for amendment, and thereupon——

Mr. SPOONER. Was it recalled from the President?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes. Thereupon it was recalled, both Houses having passed the resolution, and the amendment was proposed and was passed by the House by the requisite two-thirds majority. There is positively no objection to the bill now, which conforms in every respect to the wishes and the purposes of the Secretary of War; but I do not care about having any matter go through the Senate of the United States when any Senator feels that he does not understand it.

Mr. HALE. I do not expect whenever it is reached in the proper way to vote against action. We have been subsidizing Muscle Shoals for many years, and I have no doubt that we shall continue to do so. It is within the proper domain of the Government, and it will go on; but I have very grave doubts whether this is the proper method of reaching it. However, the matter goes over until to-morrow, and we shall then have another opportunity of considering it.

Mr. MORGAN. I will say to the Senator from Maine that this method is the one that has been uniformly pursued in measures in like position.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over.

STATEHOOD BILL.

After the conclusion of Mr. HOPKINS's speech,

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12707) to enable the people of Oklahoma and of the Indian Territory to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; and to enable the people of New Mexico and of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I desire to ask unanimous consent that on Thursday, March 8, immediately after the routine morning business, the Senate shall proceed to the discussion of the statehood bill and amendments, under the ten-minute rule until 4 o'clock; that at 4 o'clock the Senate shall proceed to vote upon said bill and amendments without debate, and that said voting shall continue until said amendments and bill are disposed of; that on Wednesday, March 7, at 2 o'clock, the general debate shall be closed by some Senator speaking in behalf of said bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request of the Senator from Indiana will be stated at the desk.

The SECRETARY. The request of Mr. BEVERIDGE is as folllows:

I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday, March 8, immediately after the routine morning business, the Senate shall proceed to the discussion of the statehood bill and amendments, under the ten-minute rule, until 4 o'clock; that at 4 o'clock the Senate shall proceed to vote upon said bill and amendments without debate, and that said voting shall continue until said amendments and bill are disposed of; that on Wednesday, March 7, at 2 o'clock general debate shall be closed by some Senator speaking in behalf of said bill.

Mr. BURROWS. I notice that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] is absent. He is interested in this matter especially, and therefore I suggest to the Senator——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understand that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON], who is the senior Senator on the other side of the Chamber on the Committee on Territories, has communicated with the Senator from Ohio, and I do not understand that he objects, or I certainly should not have offered my request for unanimous consent in his absence.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the matter of an early vote on the statehood bill has been discused more or less by Senators representing both sides of the question, and I think the date that is suggested by the Senator from Indiana is quite acceptable to all with whom I have conversed—and I have sought to converse with nearly all the Senators on this side. I conversed with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] within the last hour, and he said that a week from the coming Thursday would be satisfactory to him.

Mr. BURROWS. It is entirely agreeable to me if the Senator from Ohio does not object.

Mr. BACON. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Indiana—I did not catch it from the reading—whether the rule provides for a vote upon the amendments then pending or upon amendments pending and to be offered?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. All amendments.

Mr. BACON. Pending and to be offered?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; all amendments.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that the request be reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the request.

The Secretary again read the request of Mr. BEVERIDGE.

Mr. PATTERSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry as to the status of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PATTERSON. The bill is now the regular order, as I understand.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. PATTERSON. And will be up for debate every day at the close of morning business. I want to suggest also, Mr. President, that I think it would be better to make the request more specific as to amendments, so that it will include all amendments pending and to be offered.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well; I accept that suggestion.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I want to suggest to the Senator from Indiana—perhaps I may not have heard accurately—if I am not mistaken, the agreement provides that the last few hours of debate shall be controlled entirely by a friend of the present bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, no.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to have that part of the unanimous-consent agreement reported again.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I should like to ask that it all be read again.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well; let the whole request be restated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the request.

The Secretary read the proposed agreement, as follows:

I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday, March 8, immediately after routine morning business, the Senate shall proceed to the discussion of the statehood bill and amendments under the ten-minute rule until 4 o'clock; that at 4 o'clock the Senate shall proceed to vote upon said bill and amendments pending and to be offered, without debate, and that said voting shall continue until said amendments and bill are disposed of; that on Wednesday, March 7, at 2 o'clock, the general debate shall be closed by some Senator speaking in behalf of said bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. The meaning of the agreement is that the last half day shall be given practically for the benefit of those speaking in favor of the bill. It means that from 2 o'clock on, the balance of the day, if they have a mind to take it, will be consumed by the friends of the bill. That seems to me to be absolutely unjust.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will yield to the Senator, but the meaning of the request certainly is clear that we are to close the debate on the 7th, and that immediately after the morning business upon the 8th we are to proceed to vote. Is that correct?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not at all.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then, we proceed to vote in the afternoon at 4 o'clock.

Mr. HALE. Let me say here——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. HALE. Let me say here that from a somewhat long observation, there has never been in any of these cases any reservation or any specification as to the control of the time during the limited debate, either as in this case on Wednesday or as on Thursday. We have left all that to the discretion of the Chair. It is an impossibility in the United States Senate, after a unanimous-consent agreement of this kind has been made, that either one side or the other would undertake to control or farm out the time.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That was my purpose in calling attention to it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from Maine that we have no such thing in the Senate as general debate and no such thing as closing general debate. There has never been such a thing in my experience.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would request Senators not entitled to the floor to resume their seats. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] has the floor.

Mr. McCUMBER. This is what occurs to me: We have now before us, and will discuss for probably a day or so, the Indian bill. That will take considerable time.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That will be to-day.

Mr. McCUMBER. That will be perhaps to-day, to-morrow, and the next day. I do not know how long it is going to last. It may last three or four days. We can not say how long it will last. The time is rather short——

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McCUMBER. In one moment. The time that has been fixed is rather short. In other words, all general, lengthy debate will have to be finished before 2 o'clock on the 7th day of March. That gives us but a few days in which this matter can be discussed with any lengthy speeches. The point that I desire to make is that that is hardly long enough if we are to be shut out absolutely on the 7th day of March at 2 o'clock.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator will permit me, I think I can make entirely clear at least what the intention was, whether the wording conveys the intention or not. It was, as was the case last year and as is always the case, that the close, no matter whether it occurs at 2 o'clock or 3 or 4 o'clock—I do not care when it occurs—that at the close of what we term "general debate," the long speeches, the concluding speech shall be made by some person in favor of the bill. Then the next day we proceed, as we usually do, under the ten-minute rule until a certain hour, when we vote upon the amendments and the bill. Now, if the last sentence after the semicolon does not clearly convey that idea, I am perfectly willing that it should be modified or even stricken out. It does not make any difference.

Mr. FORAKER. I was about to suggest that those words be stricken out. They are unusual, anyway.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. We never have any trouble with such agreements.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am perfectly willing that that portion shall be stricken out. I do not suppose there will be a question on the part of any Senator that some person who favors the bill shall be, of course, entitled to close the general debate without any agreement.

Mr. McCUMBER. There would be no question upon that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then upon that understanding, let the words after the semicolon as to closing debate on Wednesday be stricken from the request.

Mr. McCUMBER. But the point was this: There may be those who are opposed to the bill who will not get an opportunity to make an extended speech upon this subject before the 7th of March, and I would not wish to cut them out.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is all right.

Mr. McCUMBER. After 2 o'clock some Senator in favor of the bill will take the balance of that day.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am perfectly willing, Mr. President, if it will clarify matters, that the words after the semicolon—concerning the closing of the general debate on the 7th—shall be stricken out if the Senator so desires, upon the understanding that the closing speech is to be made by a friend of the bill. Of course, I take it for granted that every Senator will concede to those who are in favor of the bill the right to close the debate.

Mr. McCUMBER. But probably not a half day's debate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That, perhaps, but as much as is necessary—the closing speech.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think that will cure all the trouble.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. PATTERSON. I supposed when this unanimous consent was asked that this bill would have the right of way from now until the time set for voting.

Mr. HALE. At 2 o'clock each day.

Mr. PATTERSON. At 2 o'clock each day. I was just going to suggest that to-day we have pending here an important Indian bill. We ought to have a clear understanding that no measure shall interpose to prevent a Senator from speaking between now and the time agreed upon after 2 o'clock each day.

Mr. HALE. That is what I was going to suggest to the Senator from North Dakota—after 2 o'clock—that any Senator desiring to speak between now and the 7th or 8th of March should have that right and that nothing can take that right from him.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. At 2 o'clock?

Mr. HALE. At 2 o'clock.

Mr. FORAKER. Before that is agreed to, I wish to state that I gave notice that to-morrow I would, at the conclusion of the routine morning business, address the Senate on the rate question. I do not know whether I can get through by 2 o'clock or not. I doubt if I can.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to say now to the Senator and to the Senate that, so far as the Senator who is in charge of this bill is concerned, when the hour of 2 o'clock arrives to-morrow, if the Senator from Ohio shall not have concluded his argument on the rate bill, I shall ask that the statehood bill be temporarily laid aside until the Senator shall conclude the argument.

Mr. FORAKER. I only wanted to call attention to the fact that there might be such a conflict between what is proposed and what is the usual custom.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] will take all the morning hour to-morrow and the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] will take it all on Thursday, and probably both of them will go beyond the morning hour. That practically uses up this week. I do not wish to object; but, at the same time, it seems to me that the time for debate is being narrowed down very closely.

Mr. HALE. Put it off another day.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will ask the Senator if he can not postpone the time for a vote for a couple of days?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then put it off until Saturday the 10th.

Mr. TELLER. That would be better.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Or the following Monday, the 12th. I change my request to the 12th, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request will be so modified. Is there objection?

Mr. TELLER. I do not object, Mr. President.

Mr. HALE. I suggest to the Senator to make it the 9th.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. One day more or less will not make much difference; but I prefer the 8th.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair requests Senators who are not entitled to the floor to resume their seats. The Senator from Indiana modifies his request, and it will be stated as modified.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I hear so many suggestions from Senators around me, about equally divided as to Thursday, Friday, and Monday, that I think I will let the request stand at Thursday, unless objected to, and if it is objected to I will make it for Monday.

Mr. TELLER. I shall not object.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the Senator ought to postpone that date——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very good.

Mr. SPOONER. At least until the following Monday——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I accept that.

Mr. SPOONER. For this reason: The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] gave notice that he would speak to-morrow on another subject; the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] gave notice that he would speak the next day. The bill in relation to the Five Civilized Tribes is pending here. It involves some questions of the gravest possible moment, of the utmost possible perplexity from the legal standpoint. If this bill is not passed by the 4th day of March, or some legislation upon the subject is not passed, those nations will have dissolved; and it is not at all impossible—I will change that, and say not improbable—that by the failure of the Senate to give seasonable attention to it land now vested in a qualified way in the Indian nations there will have devolved upon a railway company under an old grant, carrying values which I think the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] says amount to $30,000,000, which ought to be safeguarded for all time to the Indians and their descendants for educational and other kindred purposes. It is vastly more important that the statehood bill should wait a little longer, in addition to the forty or fifty years it has already waited, than that this bill should be in the slightest degree jeoparded.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then I will make it Monday.

Mr. SPOONER. I think, if I may be permitted to finish the sentence, after the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] shall have made his speech and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] shall have filled the engagement of which he has given notice on the rate bill, that the Senate ought not to permit other business, except the routine business, to intervene until the pending Indian bill has been disposed of.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], and modify my request from "Thursday, the 8th," to "Monday, the 12th."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not insist on that, because there will be——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Unless there is objection——

Mr. BAILEY. There will be a conflict between the statehood bill and the rate bill if any attempt is made to postpone the consideration of the rate bill that long. The Senate is ready to proceed with the rate bill, and two Senators have even now given notice of their purpose to address the Senate upon that subject, although it was only reported yesterday.

I concur in what the Senator from Wisconsin has said. I think it of great moment that this Indian bill shall be disposed of, but unless the committee having charge of that bill are insistent upon some provisions that can well be left to wait, all that is necessary in the bill can be disposed of during a single session of the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. How would Saturday, the 10th, suit the Senator?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I, of course, am not alone to be consulted. The members of the Committee on Interstate Commerce on both sides of the Chamber—the two divisions on the other side and the gentlemen on this side—all are anxious, as I understand, to proceed to the consideration of that bill. I am sure the entire Senate is anxious to proceed with it. Two or three days do not make very much difference; but I complain that for three weeks the statehood bill has been the unfinished business of the Senate and there has been but one speech delivered on it and now——

Mr. DUBOIS. Two speeches. One to-day and one before.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. BAILEY. I should have said there was but one speech, delivered in two parts, or on two occasions, and then another speech. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], of course, will pardon me for overlooking his performance this afternoon. But now that the Senate is pressed with one matter of very great general importance and with another matter of very great local importance, it seems to me that all at once there is a disposition to discuss the statehood bill. Now, my opinion is that the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Colorado, representing the two views of that question, are about the only Senators who desire to speak, unless——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; there are others.

Mr. BAILEY. Unless the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], whom we heard before with great pleasure——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And the Senator from Kansas [Mr. LONG]. There are several Senators who wish to be heard.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I am not going to be ungracious and interpose an objection, but it does seem to me a rather bad way for the Senate to discuss everything else except the bill which is before it, and then, when it has other bills before it, to proceed to the discussion of the neglected question. But if it suits the Senate to postpone the consideration of the rate bill until Monday, the 12th, I shall myself offer no objection.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I think that, on the whole, in view of all that has been said here, we had better adhere to Thursday, the 8th of March. There are two days which will be partially taken up with the consideration of the rate bill. I do not know how much time will be taken up with the consideration of the matter about which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] spoke, but certainly not longer than a day. That will leave four days.

Mr. CLAPP. At the present rate of progress a vote will not be reached for several days, I suggest.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understand, Mr. President, that the Senate is going to take up that matter immediately.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; if I ever get a chance.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Just as soon as we agree upon a unanimous consent the Senator shall have a chance. I have assured the Senator that I shall ask that the unfinished business be laid aside for the express purpose that the Senator shall have his bill considered as soon as we reach an agreement upon a day to vote on the statehood bill. On the whole, I think I had perhaps better adhere to Thursday, the 8th, or else Friday, the 9th.

Mr. SPOONER. I suggest to the Senator to let his request lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; let us settle it now, unless the Senator wants to object; and I hope he will not.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not want to object, but Senators do not appreciate the situation, I think.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I think I shall be compelled to object to the vote being taken on the 8th.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What time would the Senator suggest?

Mr. MCCUMBER. I would say the succeeding Saturday or Monday.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let us say Saturday.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I fear Saturday may not give sufficient time.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think that the statement of the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] is very wise. I also see the force in what the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] says, and, therefore, as a compromise between the two, I modify my request and make it Saturday, the 10th of March.

Mr. CARTER. I realize it is ungracious to object, and yet on that date I fear I may be obliged to be absent, and I desire to be here to vote on this question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then I will make it Friday, the 9th. How does that suit the Senator?

Mr. CARTER. All right.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I modify my request to Friday, the 9th, and if that does not suit I will put it later in the week.

Mr. PATTERSON. I think that will answer.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request as modified by the Senator from Indiana will be reported.

The Secretary read the request as modified, as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Friday, March 9, immediately after the routine morning business, the Senate shall proceed to the discussion of the bill H. R. 12707, the statehood bill, and amendments, under the ten-minute rule, until 4 o'clock p. m.; that at 4 o'clock the Senate shall proceed to vote upon said bill and amendments pending and to be offered, without debate, and that said voting shall continue until said amendments and bill are disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES OF INDIANS.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be now laid aside temporarily, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 5976.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 5976) to provide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 3, page 4, line 1, after "Sec. 3," to strike out—

That the approved roll of the Creek freedmen shall include only those persons whose names appear on the roll prepared by J. W. Dunn, under authority of the United States prior to March 14, 1867, and their descendants, and those lawfully admitted to citizenship in the Creek Nation subsequent to the date of the promulgation of the treaty of June 14, 1866, and their descendants, except such, if any, as have heretofore been enrolled and their enrollment approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That the approved roll of Creek freedmen shall include only those persons whose names appear on the roll prepared by J. W. Dunn, under authority of the United States, prior to March 14, 1867, and their descendants born since said roll was made, and those lawfully admitted to citizenship in the Creek Nation subsequent to the date of the preparation of said roll, and their descendants born since such admission, except such, if any, as have heretofore been enrolled and their enrollment approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 5, line 7, after the word "Interior" to insert:

Lands allotted to freedmen of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes shall be considered "homesteads," and shall be subject to all the provisions of this or any other act of Congress applicable to homesteads of citizens of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, as I understand the statements made by the chairman of the committee and by other Senators here, it is important that some action should be taken upon this matter between now and the 4th of March, in order to preserve the rights of the Indians to this property. Indeed, the most casual examination of this bill shows that it involves many important and serious questions, which are without the possibility of understanding on the part of Senators who are not entirely familiar with the subject. They involve the rights of these people who have been for years the wards of the nation; they involve important property rights; and this bill should not be considered in this way in this body.

I will suggest to the chairman of the committee that it seems to me manifestly proper that some legislation, some simple bill, should be passed extending for a greater or less time the tribal relations, in order that no rights may lapse or no rights may be transferred to railroad companies or to anybody else, and that the Senate then take up these questions seriously and consider them with the knowledge, or with some knowledge, at least, on the part of the great mass of Senators on this floor as to what they are doing.

We are passing legislation here about the sale of lands and about the disposition of vast amounts of property with no knowledge, so far as I know, upon the part of a large majority of the Senate as to what the effect of the legislation will be, and it seems to me that we ought, in justice to ourselves as well as in justice to the Indians, to take this question up, continue the tribal relations, and proceed with deliberation and with care upon legislation for these great interests.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, it strikes me the objection to that would be that this bill has already passed the other House. It would probably be impossible now to get any legislation except in the form of amendments returned to the House. Upon the return of amendments striking out that portion of this bill which has been carefully considered by the House I doubt very much whether the House would submit to that or whether the conferees would stand for it in conference. If they did not, then it would leave the House bill with nothing of proposed amendments for which the Senate conferees could stand, except the one proposed—an amendment which would be the repeal of this law, save the provision continuing the tribal relations of these tribes. It is the sense of the committee, and I think there are also a great many Senators outside of the committee who feel that, if the House bill stands, it ought in some respects to be amended. If my view of the situation is correct, we would simply be in conference without anything to amend, and the result would be of necessity the acceptance of the House bill on a vote of the House conferees.

There are provisions in this bill for the disposition of the mineral lands in the Indian Territory. Under the provisions of the bill those lands are subject to the joint control of the President and the Secretary of the Interior, under provisions most carefully drawn, and possibly yet to encounter the opposition of the Senate, which may result in striking them all out and leaving the House bill stand as it came from the House in that particular. I have stated to the Senate two or three times the situation here. It is a matter, of course, to me of no personal interest, but it strikes me that to send this bill back with only one amendment upon which we could go into conference would be to leave the House bill the law in the end. Is not that correct as a matter of parliamentary usage?

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I made the suggestion which I did upon the assumption that the Senate in a serious matter of this kind should do the right thing, and let each House take the responsibility of doing wrong if it saw fit.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; but——

Mr. ALDRICH. I think we are to assume here that the House of Representatives in its treatment of a matter of this kind will do the reasonable and proper thing, and that if any rights are to suffer they will realize it as strongly as we do. Of course, if we adopt these amendments, they go back to the House, and the House would have to take the responsibility. If the bill does not become effective, the law remains as it is; but I assume that the House of Representatives will look upon this matter as we do, and that something ought to be done to preserve the property and other rights of the Indians, and that we ought not to be forced—and I am not using that word in any sort of an offensive sense to the committee—we ought not to be forced three or four days before this act expires to take up a proposition of this character and act upon it, when the action must be without a full knowledge on the part of a large majority of the Senate.

Mr. CLAPP. I fully concede that it is the duty of the Senate, without regard to any body anywhere, to do what it thinks is right in the premises. We must concede that the House will attempt to do what it thinks is right; but the House might differ from the Senate as to what it thought was the best course to pursue. I am, however, still inclined to the opinion, because it does not seem to have been controverted, that if we could only send one amendment back to the House then, unless the House in the first instance, or the conferees in the second instance, submit to that amendment, there is nothing left for the conference, and it being an amendment of a bill of the House their bill would be the legally passed enactment of Congress.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CLAPP. I certainly do, with pleasure.

Mr. CULBERSON. It occurs to me, Mr. President, that the statements of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] possibly may not be fully understood. I understood him to say that it was absolutely essential to do something with reference to the tribal relations of these Indians by the 4th of March in consequence of the expiration of certain rights existing by virtue of treaties. What I understood the Senator from Rhode Island to suggest was that some action might be taken by Congress continuing those relations, so that in the meantime the Senate would have ample time to consider the merits of this bill. It will not be a question as to whether or not we amend the House bill as it is here now, but the question will simply be between the Senate and the House, or with the President, if that is possible; and if these rights exist by virtue of treaties, of course it could not take away the rights of the Indians, or it ought not to be done, at least, without the renewal of the treaty itself.

But there ought to be, it seems to me, some legal way by which we may continue the present relations of the Government with those Indians, so that if the case is as stated, and we have not time now to consider the bill on its merits, that might be done.

I simply rose to make that suggestion to the chairman of the committee, as we seemed to understand the proposition of the Senator from Rhode Island differently.

Mr. CLAPP. The difficulty, as it seems to my mind, is that if we postpone action on this bill and send a measure there, in the brief time there is to consider it, it may be lost. Now, we have their view of the situation; we have before the Senate the view of the committee; and it does seem to me if we could proceed with this bill as some of the more acute differences arise, I have no doubt they can be rectified, and we could perfect a bill which would continue the relation and at the same time make provision for conditions there which certainly require some kind of provision at the hands of Congress.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. My object I can perhaps state more clearly by making the suggestion that the Senate pass a joint resolution independent of this bill entirely, continuing for a definite time—sixty days, or ninety days, or whatever time is necessary—the tribal relations, and send it to the House. I think we are not bound to assume that the House will treat it contemptuously or that it will do anything with it that is not reasonable and proper. If we find that the House does not consider it, then we can take up this bill later on, if necessary, but we certainly ought to have a right to discuss and debate this question understandingly. That is the case so far as I am concerned, and I know there are very many Senators in the Chamber who can not do that at the present time.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.

Mr. LONG. I will ask the Senator from Minnesota whether the important part of this proposed legislation which should be acted upon soon is not section 10, in relation to the tribal schools. As far as the tribal governments are concerned, they expire on the 4th of March next, under legislation passed eight years ago to carry out a definite policy of Congress which has not been changed since that time. But with the dissolution of the tribal governments on the 4th of March of this year there will also terminate the tribal schools, and some arrangement should be made for placing those schools under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior or some other official. I will ask the Senator whether that is not the most important part of the bill which requires early attention?

Mr. CLAPP. I do not know that I would say that it is the most important part, but it certainly is a very important feature of the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will ask the Senator from Kansas if, in his opinion, the operation of section 28 as reported by the committee, to which I understand the Senator from Kansas is decidedly opposed, would not continue the schools of the Indian Territory upon their present basis as well as all other matters connected with their tribal governments.

Mr. LONG. It would; and if section 28 of the bill is adopted all other portions of the bill should be stricken out, as that section is in conflict with all other portions of the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Then I understand the Senator from Kansas to believe that the mere taking of a vacation by the schools in the Indian Territory, as we take vacations in our schools in the States for three months in summer, is of such prime importance that all legislation of property and personal rights should be made subservient thereto.

Mr. LONG. Not at all. But the policy of this legislation was begun in 1893 when the Dawes Commission was created, and the policy of allotting the lands to the individual members of the tribes and ending the tribal governments was continued until 1898, when the Curtis Act was passed. That ended not the tribal relations but the tribal governments on the 4th of March of this year, and Congress has followed that policy ever since that time.

In my opinion there is nothing that arises now which justifies a departure from that policy. The first twenty-seven sections of this bill are along the line of carrying out that policy of Congress. It may be a new policy to some Senators who are not upon the Committee on Indian Affairs and who have not given consideration to the question, but it was adopted with the approval of other Senators who gave the subject careful attention and consideration.

A Senator who is now gone, Senator Platt, from Connecticut, gave careful supervision to the legislation now upon the statute books, so far as the Senate was concerned, and fully approved what was done on these matters by Congress.

In carrying out that policy the tribal governments end on the 4th of March of this year. If Senators think that because they have only had their attention called within the past few days to the land grant to which reference has been made that other Senators have not considered that question, they are very much mistaken. I could call attention to the various acts showing that the land grant was taken into consideration by Congress in all the legislation that has been enacted for the ending of the tribal governments on the 4th of March next.

I do not believe that sections 27 and 28 are at all necessary in order to defeat that land grant. It would be most unfortunate if that grant should attach to lands in the Indian Territory. I do not think it will. I wish to call attention later, when this section is reached, to the treaties with the different tribes. I believe that under the various treaties that under no circumstances will there be any reversion of any of this land to the United States on the 4th of March next, because the conditions for the reversion are not present. This will not end the tribal relations. The tribes will not end on the 4th of next March. The tribal relations will not end when the tribal governments end. Their courts ended eight years ago, and the legislative part of the government ended to a large extent at the same time.

The remaining legislative powers and the executive part of those tribal governments will terminate on the 4th of March next. They have now but little authority. The authority which they have has in recent years been misused and not directed in the interest of all the members of the tribes. The governors under this bill are continued in office for certain purposes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator contend that when we use the words "the tribal governments shall cease" that phrase will not be construed to mean the tribal relations, but that it simply means the legislative or judicial functions? I think we have all given it the construction and have all understood the construction to be that the ceasing of the tribal government meant the breaking up of the tribe as a tribe. In other words, it no longer exists as an entity, but exists simply and solely and can be considered only in its individual parts, and we must deal hereafter, not with the tribe, but with the individual Indians.

If it is true that the declaration that the dissolution of the government means the dissolution of the tribe as a tribe and acting in its capacity as to tribal relations, then the other must follow, that it becomes Government land, because it was land that was granted to the tribe only so long as it occupied it as a tribe. The tribe there means government in my opinion.

Mr. LONG. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from North Dakota to the provisions of the treaty and the conditions under which the lands would revert to the United States. For instance, the treaty with the Cherokees in 1846 has this provision:

Provided always, That such lands shall revert to the United States if the Indians become extinct or abandon the same.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will ask as to the Choctaws and Chickasaws.

Mr. LONG. I will call attention later on to the Choctaws and Chickasaws.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will permit me, that condition, as I understand it, the Senator imputes to a treaty. Is that a treaty antecedent to the patent from the United States?

Mr. LONG. It was a treaty with the Cherokee tribe.

Mr. SPOONER. The patent was granted, it recites, pursuant to an act of Congress. If the Senator will permit me, a part of it reads this way——

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER (reading)—

Therefore, in execution of the agreements and stipulations contained in the said several treaties, the United States have given and granted, and by these presents do give and grant, unto the said Cherokee Nation, the two tracts of land, so surveyed and hereinbefore described, containing in the whole fourteen millions three hundred and seventy-four thousand one hundred and thirty-five acres and fourteen hundredths of an acre, to have and to hold the same, together with all the rights, privileges, and appurtenances thereto belonging to the said Cherokee Nation forever; subject, however, to the right of the United States to permit other tribes of red men to get salt on the salt plain on the western prairie referred to in the second article of the treaty of the 29th of December, 1835, which salt plain has been ascertained to be within the limits prescribed for the outlet agreed to be granted by said article; and subject also to all the other rights reserved to the United States, in and by the articles hereinbefore recited, to the extent and in the manner in which the said rights are so reserved; and subject also to the condition provided by the act of Congress of the 28th of May, 1830, referred to in the above-recited third article, and which condition is that the lands hereby granted shall revert to the United States if the said Cherokee Nation—becomes extinct, or abandons the same.

Mr. LONG. That was in what year?

Mr. SPOONER. That was in the year 1838.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That, I understand, was the patent.

Mr. SPOONER. That was the patent. So it will be discovered that the patent itself recites that it was executed pursuant, so far as this condition was concerned, to an act of Congress. This extinction of the Cherokee Nation may be a very vital thing.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

Mr. CLAY. Let me ask the Senator a question to see if I understand it thoroughly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas, who has given great attention to the subject, of course, both from his locality and from being a member of the committee, whether, in his judgment, if we pass section 28, modified as to time, and pass nothing else, the tribal relations and the government of the various tribes would be continued under it without any loss to the Indians, the tribes, or anybody else, say, for sixty days?

Mr. LONG. When the date was fixed eight years ago for the 4th of March of this year, why the necessity for an extension of sixty days?

Mr. ALDRICH. To enable Congress to act understandingly upon this question.

Mr. LONG. Congress has had eight years to consider the question, and it has been considering it for eight years.

Mr. ALDRICH. The committee of the Senate have had from the 18th day of January up to now to consider it, and they are asked under duress to imperil the rights of these Indians or pass a bill which we do not understand. That is the proposition which is presented to us.

Mr. McCUMBER and Mr. CLAPP addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish merely to answer the Senator from Rhode Island upon the matter of imperiling interest. The Senator made the statement a short time ago that we were about to sell this land. I call attention to the fact that if the Senator will read the bill he will see that every one of these interests is carefully guarded.

Mr. ALDRICH. I made no suggestion myself as to the effect of any of these amendments. I only took the statements of Senators who are around me, the conflicting statements of Senators who are upon the committee, if you please, and who have given this subject long consideration, the more conflicting statements of Senators who are not on the committee, as to the effect of the various provisions of the bill. I am only suggesting, in the interest of good government, in the interest of an honest administration of the affairs of these Indians, that there shall be no such haste as is imposed upon us by the suggestion that we must act upon the bill at once in order that the rights of Indians may be preserved.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, conflicting statements must always be judged by the statement itself. The statements in the instrument itself are not in any wise conflicting. If Senators will take their time, and, within the next few days in which we have got to get this bill through, if it goes through at all, read those statements, they will find that there is nothing which imperils the rights of the Indians, but, on the contrary, we have guarded in the bill against the very haste the Senator is afraid of, because we provide that under no circumstances shall any sale be made for a year. That gives us time enough to pass a dozen laws between this and the 4th day of March, 1907.

We provide, further, that the tribal relations shall continue another year at least, so that no losses will result from the dissolution of the tribes and no new interest will attach, while at the same time we are carrying out the provisions the Senator from Kansas has spoken of, which we have been carrying out gradually for the last eight years looking to the dissolution of these tribes. So everything will be protected that the Senator has spoken of—namely, the sale of the lands and the continuation of those tribal relations.

Now, the other matters are things we have considered day in and day out and have had before the Senate time and again.

It is not necessary for us to feel that we are going to be dragged into anything and forced to vote on property rights, when the bill itself provides that the sales can not take place for at least one year.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, of course it is admitted that the grant of these lands was to the Indian Nation, and that the lands were held as the lands of the nation. That has been decided several times by the Supreme Court of the United States. In the case of the Cherokee Trust Funds, in 117 U. S., it is stated:

> The lands from the sales of which the proceeds were derived belonged to the Cherokee Nation as a political body, and not to its individual members. They were held, it is true, for the common benefit of all the Cherokees, but that does not mean that each member had such an interest, as a tenant in common, that he could claim a pro rata proportion of the proceeds of sales made of any part of them.

The policy of Congress since 1893, when the Dawes Commission was organized, has been first, to allot these lands in severalty and then to give to each individual Indian his proportionate share of the tribal funds. These allotments did not result in the dissolution of the tribal relation or the extinction of the tribe, for laws have been passed providing for an official roll of the members of the different tribes and their continued existence.

The bill that we have under consideration provides that the Secretary of the Interior may bring suit either before or after the dissolution of the tribal governments in behalf of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, or Seminole tribes, respectively, for the benefit of the members of those tribes.

These tribal governments have been in process of dissolution for eight years. Their courts were dissolved eight years ago by the legislation known as the Curtis Act. It was provided that their legislature could not pass any law that would be effective without the approval of the President of the United States. It was also provided that what was left of the tribal governments should be terminated on March 4, 1906. In the very act which provided for the dissolution of these tribal governments this provision is contained:

> But this provision shall not be construed to be in any respect an abdication by Congress of power at any time to make needful rules and regulations respecting such tribes.

Congress does not lose its power over this subject by the dissolution of the tribal governments. It does not have that effect.

Now I wish to call attention (the Senator from North Dakota asked me in regard to it) to the provision in the treaty of 1855 with the Choctaws and Chickasaws. It is as follows:

> Provided, however, No part thereof shall ever be sold without the consent of both tribes, and that said land shall revert to the United States if said Indians and their heirs become extinct or abandon the same.

Not only the Indians, but their heirs, must become extinct or abandon the lands before they revert to the United States.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if he has the patent?

Mr. LONG. That was the treaty of 1855. I have not the patent. I will get it.

Mr. SPOONER. Has the Senator ever seen the patent?

Mr. LONG. I have seen the patent. I do not remember the exact provision in the patent. I will get the patent.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I call for the continued reading of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment last reported on page 5.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill at page 5, section 4.

Mr. CLAPP. In line 17, section 4, the word "as" should be "by;" so as to read:

> Show that application for enrollment by a citizen by blood was made, etc.

I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 5, line 20, after the word "application," to insert:

> Unless it be shown by documentary evidence that the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes actually received such application within the time prescribed by law.

So as to make the section read:

> SEC. 4. That no name shall be transferred from the approved freedmen, or any other approved rolls of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, or Seminole tribes, respectively, to the roll of citizens by blood, unless the records in charge of the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes show that application for enrollment by a citizen by blood was made within the time prescribed by law by or for the party seeking the transfer, and said records shall be conclusive evidence as to the fact of such application, unless it be shown by documentary evidence that the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes actually received such application within the time prescribed by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, at the end of section 5, to insert the following proviso:

> Provided, The provisions of this section shall not affect any rights involved in contests at the date of the approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the amendment which he proposed a moment ago in line 11, page 5, striking out the word "as" and inserting the word "by." I think a careful reading of the section will show that as originally drawn the word "as" should remain. It is for the enrollment as a citizen by or for the party seeking the transfer. It does not refer to the enrollment by the citizen. I think the word "as" should be retained, as the reading of the section shows.

Mr. CLAPP. No; I think not. The Senator will see that it is in the alternative. It must show that the application for enrollment was made by a citizen of blood within the time prescribed by law by or for the party seeking the transfer. I went over that with a representative of the Department last evening, and my attention was called to it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I simply wanted to call the attention of the chairman to it. It seemed to me that the grammatical construction is the other way.

Mr. ALDRICH. In pursuance of the suggestion I made some time ago, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution which I send to the desk may be now considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island introduces a joint resolution, which will be read.

The joint resolution (S. R. 37) extending the tribal relations and government of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

> Resolved by the Senate, etc., That the tribal relations and government of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole tribes or nations are hereby continued in full force and effect for all purposes until the 4th day of June, A. D. 1906; and all acts and parts of acts, so far as they conflict herewith, are hereby repealed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent for present consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. CLAPP. Under the circumstances I shall feel constrained to object. If the Senator will have the House pass the joint resolution first so that we will know there is no question but that it will meet the approval of both Houses, personally I shall have no objection to the resolution.

Mr. CLAY. Let me suggest to the Senator that the joint resolution can pass the Senate and go to the House and we can go on with the consideration of the bill. It would not interfere with the bill in the least.

Mr. CLAPP. If it is the purpose of the Senate to go on with the consideration of the bill as though the joint resolution had not passed, then of course there would be no objection on my part.

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly; I do not expect to dispose of this measure by the passage of the joint resolution. It must become a law. If the joint resolution passes the other House, then of course we will have more time. My purpose in offering the joint resolution is that the Senate shall have time enough to consider deliberately and carefully the legislation which is proposed. It is not to cut off the Senator from Minnesota at all, but simply to see if we can not get time to consider it carefully.

Mr. CLAPP. You do not cut off the Senator from Minnesota. I have no more responsibility for the bill than the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not mean that.

Mr. CLAPP. What I object to is the delaying of the pending bill with the uncertainty of getting the joint resolution through.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not suggesting any delay as to the bill at all.

Mr. CLAPP. Then go ahead.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. SPOONER. I think it may be very wise to pass the joint resolution, but I think the Senator had better let it go over until to-morrow morning so as to see whether it is adapted to the patent and title of the Chickasaws and other Indians.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no objection to its going over.

Mr. SPOONER. It may be necessary to change it a little in phraseology.

Mr. TELLER. Let it go over until to-morrow morning and then let us pass it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will lie on the table. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 6, page 7, line 5, after the words "by the," to strike out "Secretary of the Interior" and insert "President of the United States;" and in line 7, after the words "by the," to strike out "Secretary of the Interior" and insert "President of the United States;" so as to make the clause read:

If any such executive shall refuse or neglect to perform the duties devolving upon him, he may be removed from office by the President of the United States, or if any such executive become permanently disabled the office may be declared vacant by the President of the United States, who may fill any vacancy arising from removal, disability, or death of the incumbent by appointment of a citizen by blood of the tribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 7, line 12, after the word "after," to insert "written;" in the same line, after the word "notice," to insert "given under rules to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior;" in line 16, after the words "may be," to strike out "approved" and insert "executed;" in line 17, after the word "Interior," to strike out "without such exception;" in the same line, after the word "so," to strike out "approved" and insert "executed;" and in line 18, after the word "title," to insert:

and such execution shall be conclusive evidence that such executive or chief refused or neglected after such notice to execute such instrument.

So as to make the clause read:

If any such executive shall fail, refuse, or neglect, for thirty days after written notice given under rules to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior that any instrument is ready for his signature, to appear at a place to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior and execute the same, such instrument may be executed by the Secretary of the Interior, and when so executed and recorded shall convey legal title, and such execution shall be conclusive evidence that such executive or chief refused or neglected after such notice to execute such instrument.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, to strike out section 7 in the following words:

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be estimated and appraised the standing pine timber on sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, the east half of section 16, and the northeast quarter of section 6, in township 9 south, range 26 east, and sections 5, 6, 7, 8, 17, 18, and the west half of section 16, in township 9 south, range 27 east, Choctaw Nation, Indian Territory, and in the allotment thereof the appraised value of the land in said sections shall be increased by the appraised value of the estimated pine timber thereon.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior shall, by written order, within ninety days from the passage of this act, segregate and reserve from allotment sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, the east half of section 16, and the northeast quarter of section 6, in township 9 south, range 26 east, and sections 5, 6, 7, 8, 17, 18, and the west half of section 16, in township 9 south, range 27 east, Choctaw Nation, Ind. T., except such portions of said lands upon which substantial, permanent, and valuable improvements were erected and placed prior to the passage of this act and not for speculation, but by members and freedmen of the tribes actually themselves and for themselves for allotment purposes, and where such identical members or freedmen of said tribes now desire to select same as portions of their allotments, and the action of the Secretary of the Interior in making such segregation shall be conclusive. The Secretary of the Interior shall also cause to be estimated and appraised the standing pine timber on all of said land, and the land segregated shall not be allotted, except as hereinbefore provided, to any member or freedman of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes. Said segregated land and the pine timber thereon shall be sold and disposed of at public auction for cash, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, page 9, line 18, after the words "Sec. 8," to strike out the words "That the" and insert:

That the records of each of the land offices in the Indian Territory, should such office be hereafter discontinued, shall be transferred to and kept in the office of the clerk of the United States court in whose district said records are now located. The.

And on page 10, line 10, after the word "and," to insert:

The same or so much thereof as may be necessary may be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the purposes of this section, and any unexpended balance—

so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. That the records of each of the land offices in the Indian Territory, should such office be hereafter discontinued, shall be transferred to and kept in the office of the clerk of the United States court in whose district said records are now located. The officer having custody of any of the records pertaining to the enrollment of the members of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, or Seminole tribes, and the disposition of the land and other property of said tribes, upon proper application and payment of such fees as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, may make certified copies of such records, which shall be evidence equally with the originals thereof; but fees shall not be demanded for such authenticated copies as may be required by officers of any branch of the Government nor for such unverified copies as such officer, in his discretion, may deem proper to furnish. Such fees shall be paid to bonded officers or employees of the Government, designated by the Secretary of the Interior, and the same or so much thereof as may be necessary may be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the purposes of this section, and any unexpended balance shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, as are other public moneys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, page 11, line 9, after the word "court," to insert the following:

The disbursements, in the sum of $186,000, to and on account of the loyal Seminole Indians, by James E. Jenkins, special agent appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, and by A. J. Brown as administrator de bonis non, under an act of Congress approved May 31, 1900, appropriating said sum, be, and the same are hereby, ratified and confirmed: Provided, That this shall not prevent any individual from bringing suit in his own behalf to recover any sum really due him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, page 11, line 25, after the word "retaining," to insert "tribal educational officers, subject to dismissal by the Secretary of the Interior, and;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to assume control and direction of the schools in the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole tribes, with the lands and all school property pertaining thereto, March 5, 1906, and to conduct such schools under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, retaining tribal educational officers, subject to dismissal by the Secretary of the Interior, and the present system so far as practicable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, page 14, line 15, before the word "fail," to insert "willfully and fraudulently;" so as to read:

Upon dissolution of the tribal governments every officer, member, or representative of said tribes, respectively, having in his possession, custody, or control any money or other property of any tribe shall make full and true account and report thereof to the Secretary of the Interior, and shall pay all money of the tribe in his possession, custody, or control, and shall deliver all other tribal property so held by him, to the Secretary of the Interior, and if any person shall willfully and fraudulently fail to account for all such money and property so held by him, or to pay and deliver the same as herein provided for sixty days from dissolution of the tribal government, etc.

Mr. BAILEY. It seems to me that if any man having the money of these people refuses to pay it over it would not be a question as to whether there was any fraud or willfulness in it or not; it is a breach of his plain duty. It is my recollection that most of the States in the Union with reference to their treasurers have precisely that kind of a provision; that is, a provision to punish as a crime simply for failing to pay over the money. It seems to me those words are not necessary there unless it is intended to permit a man who has wasted or misspent the money of the Indians to escape conviction.

Mr. CLAPP. I will say to the Senator from Texas that this section is very sweeping. However, the committee has no particular pride of opinion and will agree to strike out the clause if objection is made to it.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, in section 11, page 14, line 19, after the word "punished," to insert:

By a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

In line 22, after the words "relating to," to strike out "such offense," and insert "embezzlement;" and in line 1, page 15, after the word "property," to strike out "so;" so as to read:

He shall be deemed guilty of embezzlement and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, according to the laws of the United States relating to embezzlement, and shall be liable in civil proceedings to be prosecuted in behalf of and in the name of the tribe for the amount or value of the money or property withheld.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, section 12, line 15, before the word "days," to strike out "sixty," and insert "ninety;" in line 17, before the word "days," to strike out "thirty," and insert "sixty;" in line 24, after the word "Territory," to strike out "be, and;" and on page 16, line 2, before the word "property," to strike out "adjacent," and insert "abutting;" so as to make the clause read:

If the purchaser of any town lot sold under the provisions of law regarding the sale of town sites in the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, or Seminole nations fail for ninety days after approval hereof to pay the purchase price or any installment thereof then due, or shall fail for sixty days to pay the purchase price or any installment thereof falling due hereafter, he shall forfeit all rights under his purchase, together with all money paid thereunder, and the Secretary of the Interior may cause the lots upon which such forfeiture is made to be resold at public auction for cash, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe. All municipal corporations in the Indian Territory are hereby authorized to vacate streets and alleys, or parts thereof, and said streets and alleys, when vacated, shall revert to and become the property of the abutting property owners.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 3, after the words "Sec. 13," to strike out:

That all coal and asphalt lands, whether leased or unleased, shall be reserved from sale under this act until the existing leases for coal and asphalt lands shall have expired. And the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to lease the residue of the unleased coal and asphalt lands for mining purposes under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, such additional leases to be limited in time so as to expire not later than the now existing leases, and the royalties to be collected and applied by the Secretary of the Interior in the same manner as the royalties under existing leases.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That the value of the segregated coal and asphalt lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, whether leased or unleased, shall be ascertained under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior and approved by the President by a board of three appraisers to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, subject to the approval of the President of the United States. Said appraisers shall return to the Secretary of the Interior a report, sworn to by them, showing the value of the lands embraced within said segregations. And in making said appraisal the surface and mineral rights thereon shall be separately ascertained and returned. And all such appraisals shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations to be approved by the President of the United States, may sell the surface of said segregated lands after six months' notice of said sale, in tracts of not more than 160 acres to each purchaser, but at not less than the appraised value. Such land shall be sold on such terms as may be fixed by regulations as above provided for, but all such lands as are unleased at the date of the approval of this act shall be sold subject to the right of any purchasers of the mineral right to mine thereunder, together with the right of ingress and egress and with immunity from damages occasioned by subsidence, and to the right of said mineral owner to acquire a sufficient amount of the surface, not exceeding 20 per centum of the said surface area, for the necessary surface works and operations of said mine, the value of said surface area for said mining purposes to be fixed by agreement between the parties in interest, or in case of disagreement said price to be fixed by three persons, one of whom shall be chosen by the owner of the surface, one by the owner of the mineral right, and the third by the two so chosen, and if they do not agree as to a third, then such third appraiser to be appointed by the judge of the United States court for the district in which such land is situated, and a decision of a majority of said three shall be conclusive as to the value thereof. And all conveyances of the surface of said lands shall contain said reservation of said mineral rights as above set forth.

And as to the sale of the surface of leased lands, the same shall be sold subject to the rights of such lessees to mine thereunder, together with the right of ingress and egress and with immunity from damages occasioned by subsidence, and to the right of said mineral owner to acquire sufficient amount of the surface, not exceeding 20 per cent of the said surface area thereof, for the necessary surface work and operation of said mine, the value of said surface area for said mining purposes to be fixed by agreement between the parties in interest, or in case of disagreement said price to be fixed by three persons, one of whom shall be chosen by the owner of the surface, one by the owner of the mineral rights, and the third by the two so chosen, and if they do not agree as to a third, then such third appraiser to be appointed by the judge of the United States court for the district in which such land is situated, and the decision of a majority of said three shall be conclusive as to the value thereof; and also subject to any rights covered by such leases, and such rights as are granted to lessees under the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes," approved April 21, 1904. All conveyances of the surface of said land shall contain said reservations of said mineral rights as above set forth.

After said appraisals as aforesaid, but not prior to March 4, 1907, the Secretary of the Interior, subject to the approval of the President, may sell the whole or any part of the coal and asphalt in and under said segregated lands, for the best price obtainable, by public sale, sealed bids, or otherwise, at not less than the appraised value, together with the right to mine the same. The title to all buildings and improvements placed on the leased premises by the lessees shall pass to the purchaser of the mineral rights, subject to the terms of the lease. All expenses, inclusive of necessary clerical assistance in the Department of the Interior, connected with and incident to such sales, shall be paid from the funds of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes on deposit in the Treasury of the United States. All conveyances made under the provisions of this section shall be executed, recorded, and delivered in like manner and with like effect as herein provided for other conveyances.

But the purchaser of any mineral right shall not, without the consent of the lessee, change the royalty under said leases, or any of them, from the royalty at the date of sale as then fixed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Subject to the foregoing provisions of this section, the Secretary of the Interior, upon the recommendation of the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, is authorized to set apart for town-site purposes such tracts of lands within said segregation as may in his judgment be necessary to protect communities of persons residing upon said segregated lands, and to cause the same to be surveyed, platted, appraised, and sold, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, but the setting aside of any such town site and the sale of lots therein shall not convey nor in any manner affect the title to the coal and asphalt deposits in or under the lands included therein: Provided, That the exemption from damages for subsidence hereinbefore provided shall not apply to tracts of land within town sites created or located on mineral lands prior to the lease of such mineral lands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, before that amendment is agreed to I wish to say a few words.

I am not sure what is the best disposition to be made of those lands, but I am sure that no disposition ought to be made of them until Congress knows what is best to do with them. Those lands are immensely valuable. Their value is estimated all the way from twenty to fifty million dollars, and judged by the royalties which the Indians would receive before the coal was exhausted they are worth even more than that. I have been inclined to believe that the best disposition that could be made of them would be to leave them as a school fund for the children of the Chickasaw and Choctaw Indian tribes. It is probably true that they would provide a fund much larger than any reasonable requirement for educational purposes of those tribes. Indeed, sir, if their value is not overestimated they would provide a school fund sufficient in time to maintain a common school system for the entire Indian Territory, including children of our own race as well as children who are descendants of the Indian race. They would be sufficient to maintain in common schools, and in the university of the new State which is soon to be organized out of that and the adjoining Territory of Oklahoma, a fund sufficient to defray the entire personal expenses of every Indian child of suitable educational age in the Territory. It seems to me that we could not make a better disposition of them than to reserve them for that purpose.

As the Indian disappears—and he will disappear; there is nothing more certain in the future than the extinction of the Indian race, whether the extinction shall come by his persevering effort to maintain the purity of his own blood, and thus he falls before the advancing column of civilization, or whether he disappears by mingling his blood with that of another race—the end is that the Indian disappears from that country. When he is gone, these lands and the income which they will afford will provide a munificent school fund for his successors. To dispose of them now gives to individual or corporate greed, as some of us may think—while others may think it gives to individual or corporate enterprise—the immense profits which the increasing population and the commerce of the country are certain to bring in the value of those coal lands.

Nor will the sale of these lands after the manner provided for in this bill contribute anything to the development of the manufacturing enterprises and the commercial industries of this new country. My own opinion is that to maintain the present system of leases under royalties, that shall be fixed from time to time in proportion to the value of what the mines yield from year to year, will be of a vast benefit to all the industries which almost depend for their success upon the supply of fuel in those mines; but if the Congress in its wisdom shall decide that these lands ought to be disposed of now we ought to write in the deed conveying them to the purchasers, their new owners, that they shall never pass into the ownership or under the control of any common carrier.

One of the grossest abuses of this time is that railroads persist in owning coal mines, and then not only compete as dealers in coal against those who employ their services as common carriers, but, as was made manifest by a litigation decided only a few days ago in the Supreme Court, they carry their own coal to their own customers at a much less rate than that which they charge to their competing coal producers or coal dealers. If a railroad desires to own a coal mine merely for the purpose of supplying itself with its own fuel, there would be some justice in the contention in favor of its right to do that; but a common carrier who abandons the business of carrying for everybody and enters upon the business of carrying for itself the product of an important industry goes beyond its charter purpose, gives a just cause for complaint against it in the minds of all reasonable men, and exerts an influence over the prosperity and the success of enterprises that it was never within the contemplation of any State to grant to a common carrier.

Therefore I indulge the hope that if the committee insist upon this amendment, or if the Senate shall adopt this amendment, they will include in it a provision that will render it forever impossible for these coal lands to pass under the control of the common carrier in that section.

I notice also, Mr. President, that there is a provision here on page 19:

The title to all buildings and improvements placed on the leased premises by the lessees shall pass to the purchaser of the mineral rights, subject to the terms of the lease.

I am not sure that I precisely understand either the purpose or the effect of that provision. Assuming that a present lessee has opened and developed a mine, has improved it in any suitable way, I desire to inquire of the chairman of the committee if it is the purpose of this amendment to include the improvements which a lessee has made, according to the terms of the lease, in the land when it is sold to the purchaser under this act?

Mr. CLAPP. Under the leases which have been executed by the Department at the end of the lease the improvements go to the lessor.

Mr. BAILEY. That would be true in any real estate transaction where the improvements were fixtures.

Mr. CLAPP. Speaking as to the surface separate from the mining rights, it seemed to the committee that it would be well for Congress to designate in the bill which title the improvements should follow—the surface or the mines below. I will say to the Senator that it is a matter of indifference to the committee, and they really rather thought it would be well in the bill itself to make that designation in order to avoid dispute.

Since I am on my feet, I want to say that it was a question of great concern with the committee whether these lands should be sold or not. Under existing law there is no provision for continuing the leasing of them. Finally, the committee, by a majority, decided to make provision for the sale. But unless members of the committee object, the chairman would have no objection to eliminating all of the provision for the sale and restoring the provision of the House bill that the lands should be reserved from sale.

Mr. BAILEY. Where is that?

Mr. CLAPP. On page 16.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I should myself be gratified to see that done, because if we lease the lands we still have it within our power, if we finally determine that not to be the wisest course, to provide for the sale; but if we sell them, then the subject passes beyond our control and jurisdiction, and we can not repair that mistake.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will make a motion to strike out the amendment from line 13, on page 16——

Mr. CLARK of Montana. If the Senator from Minnesota will permit me, I have prepared an amendment that I think will cover that. I ask to have it read.

Mr. CLAPP. Then I withdraw the suggestion I made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana [Mr. CLARK] offers a proposed amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend section 13 by striking out all of the amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, beginning in line 13, on page 16, and to restore the House provision.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That can be reached by disagreeing to the amendment reported by the committee; and the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. My attention was diverted for a moment.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Secretary again read the proposed amendment?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]?

Mr. BAILEY. I do.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In that connection I ask leave to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is now a pending amendment, the Chair will state to the Senator.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask that the Secretary may again read the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CLARK].

The SECRETARY. The proposed amendment is to disagree to the committee amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. And to restore the House provision.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That will be the effect of it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I propose to follow that with another amendment. If necessary, I will propose a substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. In section 13, on page 19, line 15, after the word "same," it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That no railroad company shall acquire any right, title, or interest in said coal and asphalt lands by purchase at said sale; and

Provided further, That the deeds of conveyance executed pursuant to such sale shall contain the specific provision that no railroad corporation or other common carrier, and no officer or stockholder in any railroad corporation or other common carrier, engaged in transporting coal from said lands shall ever acquire any interest by purchase or lease in any of said coal and asphalt lands whatsoever; and

Provided further, That said deeds of conveyance executed pursuant to said sale shall contain a specific provision that no person, firm, or corporation, and no association or combination of persons, firms, or corporations, shall ever acquire any interest by purchase, lease, trust, agreement, or otherwise in and to any portion of said coal and asphalt lands whatsoever in excess of 3,000 acres; and

Provided further, That upon violation of any of said conditions all right, title, and interest in and to said lands shall revert to and vest in the United States in trust for the tribes of Indians now owning the same; and the tribal organization is hereby continued in so far as may be necessary to execute the condition hereby created.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. I had not yielded the floor, Mr. President. I simply yielded to the Senator from Minnesota to answer an inquiry which I made about the provision in reference to improvements on the leased premises.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Just one moment.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I desire to ask, in view of the importance of the amendment submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], that it may be printed, so that we may have it for reference. I do not understand that the Senator from Wisconsin offers the amendment for present adoption.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Unless it be necessary at this time, I do not. I should be glad to have the amendment printed and submitted to Senators and to the Senate as a body for their consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin will be printed.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, if this provision is to remain in the bill, I sincerely hope that the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], or some one like it, will be incorporated in the bill, because, as I stated a few moments ago, I am sincerely anxious to see that country protected against a condition which it is alleged exists in the great coal regions of Pennsylvania and West Virginia. If, however, the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. CLARK] shall prevail, and this provision goes out of the bill, then, of course, there is no subject-matter to which the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin can attach itself.

Recurring for a moment only to the inquiry I propounded a moment ago to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], who is in charge of this bill, it seems to me that if this leasehold, or if this mineral right is sold, the lessee not buying it, the leasehold passes to the new purchaser, and with it all of the improvements. Of course where there are two separate interests in the land—the surface and the mineral rights—all fixtures which belong to the surface pass with that, and all fixtures that belong to the mineral rights would pass with them. I think that would be clear without the necessity of any express provision in the bill.

But what concerns me is that I am not willing, having leased this land, as the Government has in some cases, for a period of twenty-five years yet to run, and men having entered upon it and having improved it under a lease executed by the Interior Department in some cases, and approved by Congress, I hardly think it is due respect to the rights of the people to sell that lease, and not only sell it from under them, but to take their improvements and sell them, too.

Now, Mr. President, I am not sure that I am correctly informed. I ought to apologize to the Senate for talking so much about this Indian question and knowing so little about it. The truth of it is that they are my neighbors, and I feel always anxious to protect their interests so far as I can consistently with my sense of what is right. It is a matter of not only daily occurrence, but it occurs several times every day that citizens of that country appeal to me for protection of one kind or another.

I have never had the honor of serving on the Committee on Indian Affairs, and, therefore, Senators understand that it is a matter of course that I do not possess the detailed and accurate knowledge of these questions which Senators on the committee always possess; but I think I myself remember once, when I had the honor to serve in the other House of Congress, where some of these leases were approved, having once been approved before that, and that they were granted for a term, we will say, of thirty years, or maybe longer, and we will say that ten years of that term have now expired and they still have some twenty years to run. I inquire if under the provisions of this bill their lease would be terminated?

Mr. CLAPP. No, sir; it would not.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, of course, Mr. President, the question of their improvements could not become important, because they might just as well lose them to the purchaser at the expiration of their lease as to lose them to the Government, assuming that the Government was still the owner.

Mr. CLAPP. In regard to the question of the Senator from Texas, the matter was not one between the Government and the lessees. The bill preserves the rights of the lessees.

Mr. BAILEY. Then the provision, Mr. President, is free from objection, if the bill preserves the present rights of the lessees.

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. It has been represented to me by some gentlemen who say they are interested in that country, that this proposition is to put the land up and sell it, and, if the lessee desires to buy it, he shall have the preference to buy at the same price, and if somebody else buys it, his lease is terminated. Another gentleman said to me that the present royalty was not fixed, but that the Secretary of the Interior should fix the royalty from time to time, according to what he might determine to be fair and just.

Mr. CLAPP. While the Secretary of the Interior may do that to-day, yet upon the sale of the mineral rights the royalty must be paid to the court.

Mr. BAILEY. And the royalty is fixed before the sale is complete?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. Well, Mr. President, that seems to have regard to the rights of everybody.

Mr. CLAPP. Unless objection is made by the committee, I am disposed to accept the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana may not prevail. I labor under the embarrassment of addressing the Senate without a knowledge of the rules which is acquired by Senators of longer service. I believe that the conditions which obtain in that section of the country at the present time are intolerable, and at an opportune moment I desire to offer the reasons which convince me that that is so. I am not advised and am not aware as to whether amendments which are offered at this time are to be now voted on or not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Yes, sir; the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin will be printed at the request of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. It will be voted on later, although it is in order, if the Senate desires, to vote on it now. The Senator will be in order now if he desires to address the Senate with respect to it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will I have an opportunity, Mr. President, to address the Senate with respect to that amendment and such amendments as I have already offered, at another time?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Yes, sir; you will.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then, sir, I will defer what I have to say until another time.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. As the chairman of the committee has indicated his willingness to accept the amendment of the Senator from Montana, unless objection be made by some other member of the committee, I desire to make that objection upon my own behalf, whatever the other members of the committee may do. Of all that we seek to do in this bill, I think perhaps the elimination of this section in regard to the coal lands would be the worst, and therefore I object to the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Montana. If it should be insisted that this amendment offered by the Senate committee should prevail, I am in full sympathy with the policy outlined by the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] with regard to the disposition of whatever proceeds may arise from the sale of those coal lands, and likewise I am in accord with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] so far as the right of any corporations or carriers to obtain title to those coal lands is concerned. But I think that it is not opportune to consider the sale of those lands at this time.

When this matter was first brought to the consideration of the committee it was the consensus of opinion of most members of the committee that the lands might or should be sold. It was stated that it was the desire of the Indians that the lands should be sold. I believe they are always willing to sell anything they have in order to realize some ready money; but we must consider, Mr. President, that there are valuable interests there that we can not dispose of without due and full consideration. There is involved in this proposed transaction some 400,000 acres of valuable coal lands. The value of those lands has not yet been determined, although there is some leasing going on there. They have, however, so far as I can learn, confined their operations to the surface veins, and, having some knowledge of coal mines and mining operations, I know that there are in almost all the coal fields that exist in this country underlying veins oftentimes of considerable depth and of greater value than those that appear near the surface, which probably are the only ones that have been worked in this case.

It is a fact that there are few railway facilities in that country for the transportation of coal. There is one line of railway extending from the north to the south, and, I believe, one other leading out from Fort Smith into that country, which, I believe, is controlled by the same company. It is impossible to market coal without any railway facilities. We all know that; and unless the products of those mines can be brought to the markets, it can not be expected that the lands apparently sold, as they would be under this bill, would bring anything like an adequate price, and ample scope would be given for all sorts of combinations to gobble up those lands. They would sell at a nominal price in all probability. I am informed that the coal is of excellent quality, selling at about double the price that obtains for the lignites lying out in the Rocky Mountain regions. Therefore I am opposed to the proposition of selling or attempting to sell these lands. They would not bring anything like their proper value, and the proceeds, unless they should be disposed of as is suggested by the Senator from Texas, would be distributed to these Indians. We know how improvident the Indians are. In a very few years they would spend the money, and, in all probability, be paupers, and would have to be taken care of by the Government.

We wrestled with this proposition four and five and even six hours a day while it was before the committee, during several days' sessions, and the more we wrestled with it the more we got entangled. We voted in and we voted out propositions, and I believe there is not a single member of that committee who has a clear conception of the proposition.

Therefore, I ask that the amendment which I have offered shall be supported by the Senate. We shall have ample time in the future when that country shall have been developed, and from time to time, as the conditions may seem to warrant, to take up the question of these coal lands and dispose of it. In the meantime they may be leased, if it is thought best to do so, under similar conditions to the lands that are now being leased in that country, and as a result of those leases the Indians would get money from time to time that would subserve their purposes. In the end they would be better off, and at the same time they would be the owners of these vast coal deposits of immense and untold value.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There is one thing that I think every member of the committee was convinced of, and that was that we have not time to legislate on Indian matters as we should like to legislate. The members of the committee found themselves confronted with a mass of legislation, the like of which, I think, was never passed by any Congress of this country in regard to any subject. One reason why I am opposed to striking out this amendment of the committee is that it was the very best expression of their views of the question after, as has been said by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CLARK], many days of honest, earnest work.

We must do one of two things. We must either provide in a way for the sale of these lands at some time or we must provide for the continuation of the leasing. The House, in its wisdom, thought it better to continue the leasing provision, and that new leases should be made from time to time by the Secretary of the Interior, to terminate at the expiration of the present leases.

For those who are not informed, I might say that the present leases of the one hundred and seven or one hundred and ten thousand acres of coal lands in the Indian Territory expire in twenty-four or twenty-five or twenty-six years from this date. I am opposed to entering upon the proposition of leasing the remainder of these lands and tying them up for that length of time. I am more opposed to selling the lands at this moment. The Senator from Montana, I think, forgets that this section of the bill does not provide for the immediate sale of these lands. It provides for the sale of these lands, but not until one year shall have elapsed from the 4th of March next.

In other words, no sale of this land can be made until the 4th of March, 1907, according to this amendment. That will give the opportunity, if Congress shall address itself to the subject, for Congress to inform itself fully as to what should be done. In the meantime, the condition will remain exactly as it is at the present moment.

Unless some provision is made for the remaining land not under lease and the present leases are allowed to go, we shall have this situation confronting us—the absolute control and monopoly of the coal product of the Indian Territory within the hands of the few lessees, some twenty of them, upon the 107,000 acres now under lease.

So the committee after long conferences and with an earnest desire to do the best thing possible for the Indians, concluded to provide a way for the sale of this coal land, but determined that the sale should not begin until the 4th day of March, 1907, leaving a year in the meantime for Congress to further inform itself as to what after all might be the best solution of the whole question.

So I am not in favor of striking out the amendment, because, as I said, we would leave to the control of twenty or thirty men in the Indian Territory the entire monopoly of the coal product of that great country.

Mr. CLARK of Montana. Mr. President, I can not understand from the remarks of the Senator from Wyoming how the lessees at the present time in the Indian Territory would have a monopoly. The leases that have already been executed by the Secretary of the Interior run, I think, about twenty-five years. You can by no legislation disturb those leases as they now exist. No further land can be leased under this clause, except by the Secretary of the Interior, who is authorized to make similar leases.

Mr. CLAPP. No; but here is the trouble: Under the House provision the new leases must terminate at the same time the old ones do. The suggestion is that people will not take short leases, and that would leave the old lessees as the only lessees, and create a monopoly.

Mr. CLARK of Montana. Those leases run for from twenty-five to thirty years, and twenty or twenty-five years is certainly a very long time to lease any property. In mining operations we consider that three years is a good long lease. I can not see that the objection to leases which may run twenty or twenty-five years is valid or tenable.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator, I think, misunderstood me. The objection was not to these leases as they now are, but the objection was that if we leave those leases and enact no further legislation, those leases only will produce all the coal which can be produced, because there is no provision for the sale of the land, there is no provision for the further leasing of the land. If there should be made a provision for the further leasing of the land, as the House proposed, the leases must gradually grow shorter and shorter. Notwithstanding the vast experience of the Senator from Montana, I hazard the assertion that no person and no lessee will go upon and open a coal mine at an expense of hundreds and thousands of dollars unless he shall have a fitting term during which the lease shall run, especially when all his improvements must follow the owner upon the termination of the lease.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from Wyoming. I fully agree with him as to the difficulty that has surrounded the committee in the consideration of this question and the doubt which the committee had as to which of the two plans ought to be adopted. But if the bill becomes a law at all there certainly will be somewhere in it a provision which will continue the control of these lands, so that at a time of more leisure we may perhaps take up and dispose of the question of leasing within the near future, thus avoiding the objection to the monopoly which is of striking force, as suggested by the Senator.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I suggest to the Senator, if the necessity is so immediate that we must strike out every portion of the completed committee bill, the situation could be met very easily by the joint resolution the Senator from Rhode Island to-day introduced, only extending the time to one year instead of to June 4. I think we should go to work on this bill along the line laid down by the committee as far as we can. I think the committee fully considered this matter, and it arrived at a conclusion as to what is best to be done. I believe the substance of what the committee has done has been well done. I do not believe that because of a few hours' delay we ought to cut off the work of many weeks.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I believe the committee was largely influenced in the determination to sell this property because of the immediate dissolution of the tribal government and the difficulties which the committee saw must arise on that condition taking effect. I do not myself think it is a good time to sell the property. I was very much in favor of providing that no portion of it should be sold for the next five years. At one time it looked as if the committee would agree to that, but some members changed their view of the matter, and we finally settled on one year, for we believed it would take that time to get ready to sell.

I suppose it is not necessary to tell the Senate that a large tract of land, so valuable as that, can not be put on the market and sold instantly. It must take time. There must be an aggregation of capital, and people must be satisfied that it will be a profitable investment if they buy it.

If the tribal government is extended, the proposition of the House is all right. If it is not, I think it is exceedingly defective. If the tribal relation ceases, the question comes as to the title of the lands which are being claimed by the railroad company, whether they will take them or not, but on that I do not intend to spend any time.

We have taken charge of the Indians' property for very many years, and I suppose most people imagine that we have done pretty well with them, because there is a good deal of it left. But, in my judgment, if we had allowed the Indian there to take care of himself, to manage his own affairs, he would be worth a good deal more money, and I believe he would be quite as far on the road to civilization as he is to-day. We assumed that these Indians could not take care of themselves. So we have been interfering with them and telling them what they could do and what they could not do.

I think a very fair illustration may be mentioned. The Cherokees, Choctaws, and some other Indians there were allowed to put on the rolls those people whom they thought entitled to participate in the tribal funds. After some efforts in that behalf, the Interior Department concluded that they were not doing it as well as the Interior Department could do it. So the Interior Department took charge of it. They put on a vast army of claimants. The number amounted to somewhere in the neighborhood of 4,000 of those whom the Indians insisted were not entitled to be on the rolls.

Congress finally authorized a suit to be tried to see whether those people were entitled to enrollment, and nearly 4,000 of them were taken from the rolls by the court. They had gotten there by methods that I need not describe, but I think all can understand. The court said they were not entitled to be there.

Now, that is not all, Mr. President. There is a property interest, according to one estimate, of $20,000,000 and according to another of $40,000,000. One of the commissioners recently stated, I understand—I did not hear the statement—that an interest in the tribal property there was worth $10,000. If so, there was about $40,000,000 involved in those fraudulent claims. If it were $5,000 then there was half that amount. It is morally certain that there was a claim set up that on a trial before the courts was found to be false to that extent, while on the other hand scarcely any number of men have been stricken from the rolls either by the courts or by any other method where the Indians themselves undertook to manage their own affairs.

I say, Mr. President, that in my judgment they are eminently capable of managing their own affairs in that particular, quite as much so as any Department of this Government.

Mr. President, I should like to see this land retained, because I know very well that a large income can be derived and ultimately a large sum of money can be realized from it, but I did not myself see, and that is the feeling of the committee, that we should go to work and lease these lands for the next twenty-five years. Some of the leases run for twenty-seven years, and until the leases expire no lands can be sold. You might lease some more of it, you might lease less of it. If we could lease all the land at the rate the present is being leased, the Indians would get a million dollars a year royalty. It is my idea that it is not an excessive royalty. It is a fair royalty, considering that it is the royalty on the run of the mine. In many sections of the country a larger royalty is paid. I think it may be safely asserted that the balance of the property may be leased some time when there is a sufficient demand for coal in that section at a royalty quite as high as the present royalty, and perhaps higher.

The only trouble I have had in my mind was as to how you are going to manage this thing and the danger that will come because of the claim set up by the railroad. If the chairman of the committee consents that this provision shall go out, I am not going to make any objection, although I want to call his attention to the fact that we then take the House provision without any opportunity in conference to perfect it.

I suggest that if we are going to strike out the proposed amendment we strike out the House provision also, and then it will be within the control of the conference committee. The conference committee could put back the House provision if they saw fit or restore it with any amendment they might choose to add.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; or we could strike out the limitation on the expiration of the new leases.

Mr. TELLER. Yes; something of that kind could be done. I think the wise thing to do is to strike out the House provision.

Now, Mr. President, this all depends upon whether we are going to extend the tribal relations either indefinitely or for some particular time. Of course, the wisest thing for us to do would be to extend it indefinitely. It will be absolutely under the control of the Government some day to dissolve it or to maintain it. If we say two months, we may wish we had said a year. If we say a year, we may find embarrassment and may have wanted it two years. I think we ought to extend it really indefinitely.

I know there is in the Interior Department a very determined objection to that. After all, Mr. President, this is the body that should determine that question, with the assistance of the other legislative body, and not an executive branch of the Government. It is true the Interior Department is charged with Indian affairs. But, as the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] has said, there has been a good deal of legislation here, and perhaps the executive department might retort that we had not shown ourselves any more capable of managing this affair than the Interior Department. But I admit when I look over the legislation of the last twenty years I am absolutely amazed.

I thought I had a pretty fair knowledge of the business as it went through here, but there are so many of those things that no man can know them unless he is on the committee, and I do not believe he can then. One day we provide one thing; in the next Congress we provide another. So we have gone on. It would take a Philadelphia lawyer, with all the acumen they are supposed to possess, to determine what the present status is. Now we are pressed when we have a few days only——

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. TELLER. In just a moment. We are pressed now to determine these questions involving, as I said the other day, more than $50,000,000. It does seem to me that we ought to take a little more time. At least the committee of conference ought to have more time than they can have if we do not extend this tribal relation.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. I was going to yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. On just one point. The Senator mentions $50,000,000. I think, if I know what he has in mind, that applies to only one item.

Mr. TELLER. It applies to the lease of coal lands. I do not mean to say that it can be sold for $50,000,000 to-day, but I believe that in ten years it will be worth in the market $50,000,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. TELLER. I do.

Mr. SPOONER. I simply desire to ask a question of the Senator from Colorado for information. He had large experience in the Interior Department in dealing with these questions, and on this floor he has kept up better than most of us who have given no attention to the subject, except now and then. I ask him what is the latest decision of the Supreme Court as to the effect upon making United States citizens of the Indians and upon the question of tribal relations?

Mr. TELLER. There was a decision of the Supreme Court last summer that I think virtually declares that when they become citizens of the United States the control of the Government ceases. For myself, Mr. President, without any reference to what the court may decide, I can not conceive the possibility when a man becomes a citizen of the United States that the Government of the United States can take charge of his interest in a State. To some extent you may do that in a Territory. A State may take charge of the interest of a citizen, if he is incapacitated, if he is a minor or insane; but a citizen of the United States, in full possession of his faculties, although he may be ignorant, has a right to handle his own property. No power exists in any government respectably administered to hold otherwise.

The Supreme Court of the United States in this case held that the citizen of Kansas who wanted to sell whisky to an Indian could sell it to him the minute he became a citizen of the United States; that the laws against selling to Indians meant Indians under the law, not racial; that it did not mean because a man was an Indian by birth, but because he was an Indian by law; that what was meant by the law to be an Indian was a man who owes allegiance to his tribe and not to the Government of the United States.

Mr. SPOONER. Would it not be inconsistent with citizenship that an Indian should continue to be an annuity Indian, and draw annuities from the Government?

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me that is a question we have to meet. The tribal relation does not cease with very many of the Indians, and they are still Indians under the law; but wherever an Indian having tribal relations becomes a citizen of the United States, and dissevers himself from his tribe, I do not believe the Government would be under any legal obligations to pay annuities to him. It may be that the Government would have to pay to the tribe, because the agreement or contract which the Government has made is with the tribe. But I do not suppose under any contract which provides that Indians shall become citizens we are going to pay annuities to them.

Mr. President, I want to say just another word. The Supreme Court has often held that the Indian took no interest whatever in the tribal property—that is, in the real estate, for instance. It was asserted the other day, I know, that when the tribal relations cease they become tenants in common. The Supreme Court has repeatedly declared that the title was in the tribe and that the citizens were in no way connected with the tribe.

Mr. SPOONER. Then, when an allotment is made to the members of a tribe an Indian owns it in severalty.

Mr. TELLER. He owns it in severalty when the tribe makes a deed to him.

Mr. SPOONER. When he takes his allotment?

Mr. TELLER. When he takes his allotment.

Mr. SPOONER. He owns it in severalty, and still has his share as a member of the tribe in the communal property, the unallotted property.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly; there is no question about that.

Mr. SPOONER. How far does the Senator think that the fact of citizenship diminishes at all the power of the Federal Government to administer the communal property, to dispose of it and distribute it?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, if it were not for this so-called "grant," I should not hesitate to say that the right of the Government to control the property would continue, without any impairment in any shape because of their becoming citizens, but the Government would have a right then to dispose of the property. I should think likely the Government would be wise enough and honest enough to say, we are the trustees of it, and we will pass it over to this man, who was formerly an Indian and is now an American citizen, because there would be no other just and proper disposition that we could make of it. It is absolutely in our power to take this land and make of it a school fund if we saw fit, as suggested by the Senator from Texas, and I am rather inclined to believe that we could not benefit the Indians more than by doing that. But the difficulty is, when you come to do that, in a community half Indian, or quarter Indian, or perhaps three-quarters white, as is now the case in the Indian Territory, other people who are not entitled to the benefit of the property would get their due proportion.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator one more question, if he will permit me. What is the distinction in the Senator's mind between a tribe and a nation as applied to the Territory?

Mr. TELLER. I do not make any.

Mr. SPOONER. The patent, I notice, is to the Cherokee Nation. It speaks in the condition of the dissolution of the Cherokee Nation.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will look through the reports of the court, he will find that the court will speak sometimes of them as tribes and sometimes as nations. The terms are synonymous. They mean the same thing. We speak about the Cherokee Nation in one breath and the Cherokee tribe in the next.

Mr. SPOONER. There is a Cherokee Nation of established government, the maintenance of which can hardly be conceived of within the territorial jurisdiction of a State. That is not necessarily so as to ordinary tribal governments. What I wanted to clear up in my own mind in studying the bill itself, from the Senator's superior knowledge, is this: Putting an end to the Cherokee Nation and the Cherokee government of the nation would not affect the tribal relations, would it, necessarily? It would not extinguish the Cherokee tribe, would it? Of course if there is no tribe there is no tribal nation. I am perplexed about the thing myself.

Mr. TELLER. I am inclined to believe that, when the tribal relation ceases, and the tribal relation will probably cease whenever Indians become citizens of the United States.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, along the line and in accordance with what the Senator from Colorado has said, here is one of the very latest cases, entitled "Stephens against the Cherokee Nation." In the legislation of Congress we refer to the Cherokee Nation as a tribe, and nearly all this legislation respects the Five Civilized Tribes. Yet when we go to a court, one time, as the Senator says, they describe them as a tribe and another time as a nation. I remember in the old case where the Cherokees tried to sue the State of Georgia, they were designated as the "Cherokee Nation." Of course the Senator knows what the court decided there. But while the courts call them generally in the style of the case a nation, in discussing it through the opinion they refer to them indifferently, sometimes as a tribe and sometimes as a nation. Congress treats them as a tribe.

Mr. SPOONER. To all these interrogatories the answer comes to this point, that it must be vital along the lines of safety to prolong the tribal relation.

Mr. TELLER. The tribal existence.

Mr. SPOONER. The tribal existence, which carries with it tribal relation.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say to the Senator that I think the term "nation" has not been applied to the Indians generally, but to those living in the Indian Territory more particularly.

Mr. President, I am exceedingly anxious that this bill should pass. I am more anxious a good deal that the tribal relation shall be extended. There may be some embarrassment in doing it; I think likely there will be; I understand that the Department of the Interior thinks there will be; but if you extend the tribal relations or tribal existence, next year when the next Congress comes you can cut it off if you choose. If you fail you can not reestablish that relation.

Our legislation and the judicial decisions have been sometimes inconsistent, because we have a question to deal with that nobody else has ever dealt with. There is no precedent for it. There has seemed to be at times an absolute necessity for some Congressional action, and when it has been taken to the courts the courts have sustained it. In every instance where we have gone to any extent I believe the courts have sustained it. We could dissolve this relation and handle this property as we see fit.

I do not think there would be anything very embarrassing in the whole situation if we did not have this railroad grant. Just exactly how we shall get out of that I do not know, but I do know if it shall be said later that the railroads own this land, by any decision of the court, there will be a moral obligation upon this nation to pay the Indians for that land, because we have assumed a guardianship over it without the consent of the Indians, and if we have voluntarily given away that which we admit we are holding for the benefit of the Indians then I shall myself feel that however much it may cost the Government of the United States ought to pay for it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, in regard to the particular amendment I would suggest that the only purpose I have in view is to legislate before it is everlastingly too late. If section 28 of the bill as reported from the committee, which extends the tribal relation one year, shall be passed by this body, I am not at all insistent upon the section we are now considering. So I suggest to the chairman of the committee that this section be passed over for the present, until the fate of section 28 shall be determined.

Mr. CLAPP. That course is agreeable to me.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I desire to offer a substitute for sections 27 and 28 of the bill, which I ask may be read and printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Insert as a substitute for sections 27 and 28 of the bill:

That immediately upon the dissolution of the present tribal governments of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole tribes the government of said tribes respectively shall devolve upon the Secretary of the Interior, and the tribal existence and tribal relations shall not be in any wise affected by the change in the form of government, but shall continue unaffected until all property of such tribes, or the proceeds thereof, shall be distributed among the individual members of said tribes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I am in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CLARK]. I desire to have printed in the RECORD an extract from the report of the United States Indian inspector of the Indian Territory for the last fiscal year, showing the receipts from the coal lands there from royalties during last year and several years prior thereto. I do not desire to have it read, but to have it printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the part of the report referred to by the Senator from Kansas will be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The royalty on coal and asphalt collected and placed to the credit of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes during the fiscal year is shown by the report of the United States Indian agent to be $245,858.56 for coal and $2,569.80 for asphalt, a total of $248,428.36.

These amounts include certain payments of advanced royalty, as required by the leases, and therefore do not agree with the reported output in tons. I submit below a comparative statement showing revenues derived from this source for each fiscal year since the matter was placed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior:

| July 1, 1898, to June 30, 1899 | $110,145.25 |
| July 1, 1899, to June 30, 1900 | 138,486.40 |
| July 1, 1900, to June 30, 1901 | 199,663.55 |
| July 1, 1901, to June 30, 1902 | 247,361.36 |
| July 1, 1902, to June 30, 1903 | 261,929.84 |

Mr. CLARK of Montana. Mr. President, I desire simply to say a word with reference to the suggestion about eliminating section 13 of the bill as it came from the House. If this were done and if we also cut out the committee amendment, it would leave the present statute, enacted in 1902, to govern the sales and rentals of Indian lands in force.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will pardon me, it is proposed in case the Senate committee amendment goes out, to also strike out the House provision of the bill, so that it will be a subject for conference when the conferees meet.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. How would it be if they were to overlook it? There is a statute, I think, of 1902 which provides for the sale and rental of these lands. I think that would still be in force.

Mr. CLAPP. That statute has been repealed, and that is why it is necessary, if we strike out the Senate committee amendments, to make some provision in the House bill for the further leasing.

Mr. CLARK of Montana. But it leaves the provision for the sale of those lands as provided for in the law of 1902.

Mr. CLAPP. No.

Mr. CLARK of Montana. I think so.

Mr. CLAPP. It would if we did not legislate at all; but we propose by this amendment——

Mr. CLARK of Montana. If we legislate and do not amend that portion of the law, it will leave it intact.

Mr. CLAPP. That is why it is proposed to strike out the provision, so as to make a subject for conference with the House of Representatives.

Mr. CLARK of Montana. I understand the bill is to go over for the present.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I dislike to detain the Senate at this late hour, but I wish to say a few words.

I hope we shall pass the amendment which was adopted by the Senate Committee after very careful consideration. In my judgment there never will be a time in the future when Congress can legislate more in the interest of the Indians of that Territory than now. If this amendment of the Senate committee shall go into the bill we shall have a chance, as I understand, to vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and after that the conferees may come together and further perfect it.

My observation on the Committee on Indian Affairs teaches me that there is a great pressure going on constantly in the Indian Territory to take property away from the Indians; and it is not confined to the Indians—that is, the full blood Indians—because three-fourths of these Indians are either almost entirely white or partly white. We shall probably soon have two Senators here from Oklahoma. They will be surrounded by Indians and white men and importuned to dispose of the Indian property as fast as it possibly can be done. My observation also teaches me that we defer very much to the Senators from the various States, and we shall also defer to the Senators from the State in which Oklahoma is included. The white Indians will be no more careful than the white men in that Territory to guard the interests of the Indians. I think we should settle this matter now. If the provision inserted by the Senate committee, which they adopted after a great deal of careful consideration, is not sufficient, let us amend it, and let us work the matter out in conference. I do not think, in the interest of the Indians, that we ought to postpone the determination of this question.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Idaho permit me to inquire if he has taken into consideration the fact that there is no public land in the Indian Territory which may be granted to those people for school purposes? Of course, I presume there is still enough public land in the Territory of Oklahoma to constitute a full quota of land for the people of the new State, assuming that the two Territories will become one State.

Mr. DUBOIS. My understanding is that there is a great deal of land there which is still tribal land after all the allotments which have been made and after those which are contemplated shall have been made.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; but they are not public lands of the United States.

Mr. DUBOIS. No.

Mr. BAILEY. They are not lands which the Government can grant for school purposes, because if we ever allow them to become public lands we run up against this very difficulty with the railroads, and the railroads will get the lands before the school children will.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I was about to ask the Senator from Idaho if it were not the fact that the amount of land proposed to be granted to the new State of Oklahoma for school and other purposes is not very largely in excess of the amount heretofore granted to the Northwestern States?

Mr. DUBOIS. I think so.

Mr. WARREN. That is what I thought.

Mr. BAILEY. Probably it may have been thought that they need a little more for educational purposes; but I assure the Senator they do not.

Mr. WARREN. Undoubtedly they need more; at any rate, they have asked for more.

Mr. BAILEY. They want all they can get, however.

Mr. WARREN. But I observe in the bill for the admission of the proposed new State that the quantity of lands and the amount of money is very greatly out of proportion to that which has been heretofore granted to other States. There seems to be a very great streak of liberality, which I am, of course, very glad to see, in the pending statehood bill.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] that he is in error in regard to the grant to Oklahoma. With the exception of some special grants which were made to Oklahoma, their grant has not been excessive, as has been intimated. The older States in the Mississippi Valley only got 1 section of land to the township for school purposes—section 16. The States of Wisconsin, Minnesota, and some of the other States received only that grant, while the States which were admitted later—and I think the Senator's own State of Wyoming amongst them—got 2 sections to the township for school purposes—sections 16 and 36. In the statehood bill 4 sections to the township are given to the new State of Arizona, while as to Oklahoma only 2 sections to the township are given, outside of some special grants. The reason for some appropriation of money is the fact that the Indian Territory has no school lands, because all the lands in the Indian Territory belong to her.

While I am on my feet I desire to add another thing about the necessity for the tribal government. If I recollect aright, the title to all these lands in the Indian Territory came to them in the shape of patents from the United States Government to the tribes or nation as an entirety. In all the cases where we have proceeded to make allotments to them in severalty it has been necessary, in order to complete the title, to have some authority to make some kind of a deed to the allottees, as you perceive by this bill, and that is being kept up. The tribes are required to execute the deeds. In case they decline to act there is a provision made for the President to appoint other officers in their place, and if there are no officers, then the Secretary of the Interior is to execute the deeds.

All of the work of the Dawes Commission that has been going on for years has simply been the partition of a great estate, and you all know what the partition of an estate in a court means where there are many claimants. The work has been going on of partitioning these lands in the Indian Territory among the members of these tribes. There are five tribes. The first work that Commission had to do was to ascertain by an enrollment who were members of the tribes. There were not only the full-blooded Indians, but there were the mixed bloods, and the mixed bloods are so nearly white that you can not tell by looking at them that they have a drop of Indian blood in their veins. Then there were some who were members of the tribe by adoption—white men. They are members of the tribes because they married Indian women. Then there was another class of white men who have neither married Indian women nor are Indians who have been made members of the tribe by adoption.

Each tribe of these nations before the civil war owned slaves. After the war was over the slaves were freed, and we compelled the Indians to admit those freedmen and their descendants into a certain fellowship in the disposition of the tribal funds.

Now, so long as there are any tribal funds to be distributed, and so long as there are any tribal lands to be disposed of by allotment or leasing or otherwise, it seems to me it is necessary that some tribal authority shall continue to remain, and therefore the necessity for this bill for the purpose of continuing the tribal organization in order that the administration of that property may be completed.

The first work was mainly done by what was called the "Dawes Commission," with which you are all familiar. That Commission was at one time composed of five members; then it was reduced to three. On the 30th of June last the life of the Commission had expired and the work of the Commission has since been continued by one member, a man who was chairman of the Dawes Commission before it expired. The Commissioner of the Five Civilized Tribes is now carrying on the work formerly performed by the Dawes Commission.

In reference to the coal lands in the Territory, I see that the committee have divided. I am not prepared to say which is the best course to pursue as an absolute proposition, but it strikes me that if these coal mines are as valuable as is contended for here it would be a wise policy for the protection of the Indians to have the lands remain with them and to have them leased. They would thereby obtain a greater revenue, and they certainly need it for the development and maintenance of their educational system.

I wish to say another thing in this connection before I sit down. When we speak of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians, while the aggregate number of them is somewhere between 80,000 and 90,000—I do not know the exact figures according to the last enrollment, but it is over 80,000 and may come up to quite 90,000—yet the great mass of them are really white men. There are only about some twenty-odd thousand that are really Indians; so that to a large extent we are legislating for white men.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to ask the Senator from Minnesota if he has fully considered our ability to hold those lands after the 4th day of March under any tenure, so that they will not inure to the benefit of the Government and afterwards the railways get title to them?

Mr. NELSON. In reference to the railroad grant the Senator speaks of, I want to say that I do not know anything about it and am not able to express any opinion regarding it. I was not aware of the fact that there was such a grant until this bill came before the Senate.

But I want to say in reference to the disposition of the lands of the Indians under the Dawes Commission, to which I have referred, that they have been engaged for the last ten or twelve years in making an enrollment of the tribes and ascertaining who are entitled to share in the disposal of the lands; and then we have provided a system of allotments which is of a twofold character. We make one class of allotments, which are known as "homesteads;" and in another case, if I remember aright, in the case of the Choctaws, those homesteads are limited; they are made inalienable forever; they are untaxable; while in the case of the other tribes they are inalienable for a period of twenty-one years or during the lifetime of the allottee. We have made another class of allotments to Indians which have a limitation, if I remember aright, in most cases, of five years upon the right of disposal.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand all that, but I do not think the Senator fully comprehends the scope of my question.

We have this character of condition: This land has been granted by deed patent to the Indian nation composed of several tribes. There is a provision in the deed that when they cease to be a nation the land shall revert to the United States. In the interim there is a provision with a grant to the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company that in case these lands become public lands of the United States every odd section for a distance of 10 miles on each side of the roadway shall become the property of this railway company.

Mr. LONG. Provided the Indian title is extinguished.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course; but the point I make is that the Indian title becomes extinguished by operation of law the moment the tribal relations cease to exist. Therefore, upon the 4th day of March, the tribal relation having ceased, and the nation having ceased to exist as a nation, the land becomes the property of the United States, and becoming the property of the United States then the grant to the railway company, which was conditioned upon its becoming public land of the United States, would take effect.

Now, in order to prevent this there were some differences of opinion as to whether there was any possible way of our preventing the passing of title to the railway company other than by continuing the tribal relation. It was thought by some, Mr. President, that we could do it in this way: That we could provide that the title should not revert to the Government upon the dissolution of the tribe, but that it should revert to the Government in trust for the individuals constituting that tribe.

I am somewhat doubtful myself as to whether we can get around the provision in that way, but I am certain and clear that the condition under which the railway company can take must be a condition that the property reverts to the United States. If we can dispose of it in any way so that there is a clear disposition of it before that reversion, then the condition precedent never arises under which the railway company can take, and the property will be free in all future time of their claim. For that reason, in addition to the provision that the title should remain in the Government only in trust for the Indians, we framed the additional section in the bill that the Indian tribal relations should continue. We propose to continue them by this bill for another year. The reason that we say another year is because between this and another year we have still another session of Congress, besides the remainder of this one, to consider what may be best in the matter of the sale and disposition of their property.

Mr. NELSON. And it is possible that allotments may exhaust it.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is certain that if the railway company's claim attaches, the allotments that have been taken will be vitiated, and there will not be nearly enough land for the purpose of making those allotments.

Mr. NELSON. I do not think the claim would attach to the allotments already made, but it is possible that it might attach to unallotted lands.

Mr. McCUMBER. The mere allotting does not pass the title.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from North Dakota is a very able lawyer, and I want to call his attention—it will take but a moment—to the very peculiar language of this grant so far as it relates to the Indian Territory. The act made a grant to Kansas to aid in the construction of a railroad. The section which refers to the grant is very short, and out of it originates the grant involved in the pending bill. The Senator will see from the language that it was not the intention of the Congress which made that grant that the mere extinguishment of the Indian title would operate to constitute the grant of public lands of the United States—that is, the grant and the lands out of which the grant was carved.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have not read the section, and I do not know the clause to which the Senator refers.

Mr. SPOONER. I will read it, and the Senator can give his opinion and his thought about it.

SEC. 9. That the same grants of lands through said Indian Territory are hereby made as provided in the first section of this act—

That was the Kansas grant. Ten sections per mile on either side of the road were granted, to be selected within 20 miles of the line of the road—

Whenever the Indian title shall be extinguished by treaty or otherwise—

That is the language—

That the same grants of lands through said Indian Territory are hereby made as provided in the first section of this act, whenever the Indian title shall be extinguished by treaty or otherwise, not to exceed the ratio per mile granted in the first section of this act——

Mr. McCUMBER. That is ten sections per mile.

Mr. SPOONER. If it had stopped there there would be more strength in the proposition that the Indian title being extinguished by treaty or otherwise the grant attached; but it does not stop there. It says:

Provided, That said lands become a part of the public lands of the United States.

That is the last word of the Congress as to that grant. "It is provided"—which qualifies all that precedes it, and it shows beyond any doubt, one would think, a purpose on the part of Congress to retain a locus penitentiæ, so to speak. The lands owned by the United States are not public lands within the land laws of the United States. In the land laws of the United States the phrase "public lands" has been defined by the Supreme Court—first, in Newall v. Sanger, then in Barton v. Northern Pacific Railroad, then in Roberts v. Tacoma Company, which involved tidelands—as describing lands subject to entry or settlement under the general law of the United States. The Supreme Court says, in one of its decisions, that the words "public lands" are used habitually by Congress in this sense—lands open to sale or entry under the general laws of the United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. It means lands other than those merely owned by the Government?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. At all events, it must be lands to which the Indian title has been extinguished.

Mr. SPOONER. Not only that, but lands which the Government shall choose to restore to public entry under the general laws of the United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is it necessary that the Government restore them to public entry the moment they become the property of the United States, where they have not been carried in some other way or regarded as something more or for some purpose other than for the purpose of settlement? Do they not become by operation of law public lands?

Mr. SPOONER. To say that, strikes out the proviso. Let me call attention to it again, because I want the Senator over night to consider it:

That the same grants of lands through said Indian Territory are hereby made as provided in the first section of this act, whenever the Indian title shall be extinguished by treaty or otherwise, etc.—

That ends that—

Provided, That said lands become a part of the public lands of the United States.

That is in addition to the provision for the extinguishment of the Indian title. That implies, if you give any effect whatever to the language, that it was not the intention of Congress at the moment the Indian title was extinguished that these lands should become public lands of the United States. The grant only takes effect, in the language of the proviso, when the Indian title shall have been extinguished and the lands shall have become, within the meaning of the words in law, public lands of the United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think I can probably answer that, or I can give my opinion on it even at the present time, without thinking over night upon the subject.

Mr. SPOONER. To me it is an intricate question.

Mr. McCUMBER. I admit it is an intricate question. I admit that I might answer it probably more thoroughly by taking the time the Senator suggests, but the Senator must remember that we are dealing with lands of the Indians and selling them and handling them in many ways. We are selling them to private corporations and extinguishing title in that way; we are allotting them in severalty to the Indians, and are extinguishing title in that way. There are many different ways in which we are disposing of them.

Now, I would say that that is intended to cover this condition: The mere extinguishment of the tribal property or the tribal interest in the property would not of itself in all cases bring this other grant into being. For instance, instead of extinguishing the title, and the title thereby reverting to the United States, the lands might be sold. They might be sold to other tribes or to corporations, and they reserve, it would seem to me, the right to extinguish the Indian title, without necessarily purchasing the land themselves or the land becoming public property. What I refer to is where nothing else is done—where there is nothing but a reversion. Suppose the title does become extinguished by the operation of law, the condition under which the grant was given having come into effect by which the title of the tribe was to be extinguished; then it seems to me by operation of law it becomes land of the United States.

Now, when there is no other arrangement made with reference to that land by any law, when no law has been passed dedicating that land to any other purpose, is it not by operation public land? In other words, is it necessary that there should be an order throwing the land open?

Mr. SPOONER rose.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me make myself clear. If that were true, then the title of the railway would not come into existence until there had been a declaration that it was thrown open for settlement, which would be entirely inconsistent with the idea of the Government holding it for other purposes.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator in the last analysis does not construe it differently from my construction of it, because it is that proviso which to my mind—I may be mistaken about it—gives the right to Congress to dispose of the lands as it chooses now.

Mr. McCUMBER. I claim we have that right.

Mr. SPOONER. Would we have it without this proviso?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think so.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, that is all I claim.

Mr. WARREN rose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. WARREN. I thought the Senator from North Dakota was through. I simply desire to move an executive session when he is through.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know that I have any further remarks to make now.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The unfinished business should be resumed before a motion is made to go into executive session. I do not want to have the unfinished business displaced by any manner of means.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was not displaced.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Going into executive session and then adjourning upon the consideration of the bill the Senator from Minnesota has in charge would not displace it?

Mr. LODGE. The unfinished business was laid aside by unanimous consent.

Mr. KEAN. It was laid aside by unanimous consent. There can be no doubt about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There was an agreement this morning, as the Chair understands, that the unfinished business should be temporarily laid aside, and it is not displaced by an intervening motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WARREN. That was perfectly understood and stated.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 28, 1906, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 27, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CORRECTION OF THE RECORD.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I voted "no" on the canal proposition. I found I was paired—a fact I overlooked when I voted—and I want to record this statement.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to have the Journal amended showing that he did not vote?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It already shows that I was present and voted, but not that I voted "no" or "aye." I voted "no," and changed my vote from "no" to "present," as I found I was paired—a fact that I had overlooked—and I would want this statement to go into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

KONGO FREE STATE.

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Speaker, I have here a letter from the Secretary of State in regard to the relations of the United States to the Kongo Free State. At the suggestion and request of Members, I ask unanimous consent that this may be printed as an Executive document for the convenience of Members and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

HOUSE RESOLUTION NO. 197.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, under the agreement that was made by the House, I wish to call up my motion that it be ordered that House resolution No. 197 be canceled as a resolution of this House, and that the copies in the document room be removed and destroyed. And I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, it will be remembered when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] brought this matter up last we made an agrement that it would wait until Mr. VAN DUZER could be either seen or heard from. I now have from him a letter, which I will read and insert in the RECORD. It is as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, February 7, 1906.

MY DEAR MR. WILLIAMS: I note action yesterday regarding a resolution purporting to have been introduced by me.

I will say that have never seen original or copy of same; that I never authorized, directed, or requested introduction of same; that it was introduced without my knowledge or consent, and am as yet unacquainted with even its purpose or language.

I was detained West by illness of my wife, who at present time is critically ill. I am suffering from effect of injury in a wreck, and have been under physician's care for ten days.

I write to explain about resolution, so you may take action necessary, if party interests are at all involved.

Yours, very truly, C. D. VAN DUZER.

Of course I have no objection in view of the request made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I would like to state that Mr. VAN DUZER knew nothing of the introduction of this bill, and my only object and the necessity for bringing it up in his absence was that a resolution became a privileged question subject to the call of any Member of the House, and it was necessary that I should bring it before the House and take the proposed action.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the order.

The order was agreed to.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is it not a privileged question? It seems to me that we ought to pass a resolution and name a committee, providing for an investigating committee to ascertain who introduced this bill and who introduces bills here in the name of other Members and without their consent.

The SPEAKER. The rules determine who has a right to introduce bills.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yet Mr. VAN DUZER in his letter says that he did not introduce this bill. Who did introduce it?

The SPEAKER. Precisely; and the House has adopted the order which strikes it from the RECORD.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, are we to be treated in this way? Can anybody not a Member write a bill, sign a Member's name thereto, come into this House, and introduce it by putting it in the bill basket, and it shall go as a bill introduced by a Member? If that is to be allowed, Members are at the mercy of anybody who would do a thing of that sort.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the regular order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It is a privileged question, and this House ought to investigate and find out who introduced this bill. We have the right to know who introduced this bill—so-called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands the regular order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why, of course; we must be at the mercy of the whole world. What sort of a House of Representatives is it?

LAKE ERIE AND OHIO RIVER SHIP CANAL.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question on the bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14396) to incorporate the Lake Erie and Ohio River Ship Canal, to define the powers thereof, and to facilitate interstate commerce.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on ordering the previous question. As many as are in favor of ordering the yeas and nays on the previous question will, when their names are called, answer "yea;" as many as are opposed will answer "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the House, I ask that the Speaker again put the question upon which we are about to vote, as there was so much disorder I do not think the House understands.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves the previous question, and upon ordering the previous question the yeas and nays are ordered. As many as are in favor of ordering the previous question will, when their names are called, answer "yea;" as many as are opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 168, nays 87, answered "present" 14, not voting 114, as follows:

Mr. DIXON of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman listening when his name was called, or should have been called, and failed to hear?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. I was at the back of the room and did not hear.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman giving his attention?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. I do not know whether I was giving my attention; I did not hear.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, the gentleman hardly brings himself within the rule.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. I did not hear my name when it was called.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, upon the passage of the bill I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 196, nays 83, answered "present" 12, not voting 92, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. DALZELL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On February 23:

H. R. 8773. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Joslin;

H. R. 7085. An act authorizing the Pea River Power Company to erect a dam in Coffee County, Ala.;

H. R. 11263. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the navigable waters of St. Andrews Bay;

H. R. 13567. An act to authorize the Campbell Lumber Company to construct a bridge across the St. Francis River in Clay County, Ark., at or near the point where the section line between sections 21 and 28, township 19 north, range 9 east, touches said river; and

H. R. 13568. An act to authorize the Campbell Lumber Company to construct a bridge across the St. Francis River in Clay County, Ark., at or near the point where the section line between sections 23 and 26, in township 20 north, range 9 east, touches said river.

On February 26:

H. R. 12864. An act to provide for the purchase of certain coal claims in the island of Batan, in the Philippine Islands; and

H. R. 13104. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to revise and amend the tariff laws of the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1905.

On February 27:

H. R. 12320. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

IRRIGATION OF CERTAIN LANDS ON YAKIMA RESERVATION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 10067) which I called up on Saturday last. I will state that this bill has been carefully examined by the chairman of the Committee on Arid Lands and by other members of that committee, and with a few slight amendments, which will be offered, it is entirely satisfactory to them. The bill was read in full and printed in the RECORD, and I ask that it be not read further.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10067) authorizing the disposition of surplus and allotted lands on the Yakima Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, which can be irrigated under the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There are some committee amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendments, if they have not been reported.

Mr. JONES of Washington. They have been read in full.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington offers the following amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "practicable," in line 9, page 1, insert the words "and undertaken."

In line 11, page 3, after the word "Indians," insert "on said Yakima Indian Reservation."

In lines 16 and 17, page 3, strike out the word "purchase" and insert the word "acquire."

After the word "due," in line 1, page 4, insert "or the charges under the reclamation act."

In line 3, page 4, strike out the word "sell" and insert "dispose of;" and in same line, after the word "land," strike out "and water right."

After the word "provided," in line 4, page 4, strike out the remainder of the section.

On page 6, in line 4, strike out the word "shall" and insert "may;" and after the word "be," same line, insert "at a cost to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior."

After the word "provisions," in line 5, page 6, insert the words "of the reclamation act and." In the same line 5, page 6, strike out the word "shall."

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, they will be considered in gross.

The amendments were considered, and agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JONES of Washington, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill making appropriations for the Army. And pending that I ask unanimous consent that all those who have spoken on the bill, or may speak on the bill under the five-minute rule, have permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SLAYDEN. In reference to military matters only.

Mr. HULL. In reference to military matters alone.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. HULL was then agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill, with Mr. BOUTELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill, and the Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase and binding of professional books of recent date treating of military and scientific subjects for library of School of Submarine Defense, and for use of school, $1,000.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice quite a number of appropriations in this bill of a general character to be expended under the direction of some chief of a bureau or head of a division. I read some two or three weeks ago an article in one of the local papers stating that out of funds appropriated, to be expended under the discretion of the various divisions of the War Department, during the last ten or twelve years money had been expended in the purchase of apparatus or equipment of one kind and another that was practically useless, to the amount of nearly $30,000,000. The article, it seemed to me, contained a very severe indictment against the methods of the War Department or against Congress. I do not know how much truth there may have been in the statement, but it charged that large sums of money were appropriated to be expended by the chiefs of bureaus in their discretion, and, having little or no appreciation of the value of money, Army officers expended large sums for one thing and another of no practical value—implements and equipment that were thrown aside and abandoned almost immediately after they were purchased.

Now, in running over this bill I find the amounts appropriated in this manner are generally quite small. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee what he knows about the charge against the War Department of recklessly expending the public money for useless equipment and implements. What, if any, information has the committee on that subject?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I had my attention, also, called to the same account that the gentleman from Indiana has alluded to, and my impression is that taking the last fifteen years and counting up all that has been condemned and thrown away, it would amount to a very large sum of money, and yet it would not necessarily call for any criticism on the War Department. For instance, horses, mules, wagons, harness, tents, when they become useless are condemned by a board of Army officers. Take the first cost of horses and mules that are condemned, of the wagons that are condemned, the harness that are condemned, and then take what the Government receives for them when condemned by a board of Army officers and sold at public auction and it would make a large sum of money.

Take another thing. When the Spanish war broke out we sent large quantities of supplies, commissary supplies, to Cuba. There was no provision made for storage. They were banked up on the seashore subject to damage by the weather, and a large amount of them were damaged and thrown away and virtually not sold because nobody would buy them. The same thing was true in a greater degree perhaps at Manila, in the Philippine Islands. Large quantities of medical and commissary stores that were sent there were good when shipped and, on account of lack of facilities for properly caring for them, were spoiled, spoiled because the Government could not properly care for them. And yet I doubt if the Department should be subjected to criticism for sending the articles there, for the reason that no one could tell how many troops would be sent there; no one could tell how large an army would have to be kept there, nor how long the Army would be there, and the country would have risen up in condemnation of the officers of the Army if they had not provided abundant supplies. Always in time of war there is great waste and in time of peace a certain amount will always be inevitable. If no property ever became unserviceable, the cost to the Government for support of the Army would be greatly reduced. If all our household and kitchen furniture always remained good, expense of living would be reduced. If the ships of our Navy always remained serviceable and up to date, what a great Navy we would have. I submit it is not fair to make such criticism on so small a basis of fact.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Indiana may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, the criticism I saw had no reference to the purchase of useful or necessary articles. It charged that useless articles, articles that were practically worthless, had been bought by various divisions of the War Department from appropriations made to the amount of about $30,000,000. It did not include horses, mules, and provisions, but the purchase of equipment, flying machines, and such things as binocular glasses, telescopes, heliostats, and a whole lot of things like that.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say, for the benefit of the gentleman from Indiana, that the Committee on Military Affairs has never authorized the purchase of flying machines or any experimental machines of that kind. That has been done by the great and good Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the statement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HULL] is not quite correct. The bill for the fortifications appropriations has carried every year an item which has been placed at the disposal of the Board of Ordnance, if I am not mistaken, from which they are empowered to experiment and to ascertain the usefulness of different articles of war, and it is under the general bill that that Board is authorized to do this.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, my recollection is that the flying machine was specifically authorized by the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is my recollection also. What I would like to know is which one of the committees and which one of the bills carries the appropriation that has resulted in such alleged wastefulness of the public funds. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] whether, in his opinion or within his knowledge, there has been a useless waste of public funds in the purchase of equipment and experimental instruments and things like that under this general appropriation.

Mr. HULL. Not under this bill.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Under any bill.

Mr. HULL. Well, Mr. Chairman, I regard the flying machine as absolutely absurd. I am not a scientific man, however, but a machine that will fly to the bottom of the river, to my mind, is of little use.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will if the gentleman can furnish any information.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I desire to say that I do not think we will reach any paragraph in this bill to which the flying machine is pertinent.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. My inquiry is not confined to the flying machine alone. What I am trying to find out is whether it has been the practice of the various divisions of the War Department to use the public money wastefully in the purchase of things the value of which have not been practically demonstrated—instruments that have been cast away and abandoned.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I want to try and reply to that question.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Then I would be very glad to hear from the gentleman on that subject.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would say to the gentleman that unquestionably experiments are conducted by the ordnance corps, which is the scientific branch of the Army, and unquestionably as they go on in various steps of development, from one step to another, they will expend money that in one sense of the word will be wasted, as in the case of the manufacture of guns and gun carriages. Some have been manufactured that appear good to-day, but circumstances will compel the abandonment of them to-morrow, because they can get better ones.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I appreciate the force of that proposition, but I would ask the gentleman, he being a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, if his committee investigated at all the charge contained in the public press of wasteful extravagance in the expenditure of money on the part of the War Department? Did his committee make any investigation in regard to that?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think I have said all that I care to say on the subject. I was groping in the dark, and I have received no information yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I did not desire to take up the time of the committee to any extent. I want to simply say I have made enough investigation of this question to become thoroughly convinced that so far as it applies to the waste of money in the purchase, from appropriations made by the Committee on Military Affairs, of unnecessary articles, there is absolutely no truth in that charge. So far as it applies to loss to the Government from loss in clothing, in artillery and cavalry horses, in wagons which are worn out; from the loss in harness that has been condemned and sold; from the loss in provisions largely brought about by our occupation of the Tropics before we had facilities for caring for the goods; from the loss in medical stores which were sent to the Philippine Islands and damaged by the weather—outside of these that are legitimate, unavoidable, which could not be helped—there is no substantial truth in the charge that there is any waste of public money. I want to say just one word more, that if you read this bill you will find it is drawn with such particularity—and has been so drawn in all the years past—that they are compelled to purchase only the things that are provided for in the language of the bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What is the modus operandi for condemning supplies? Who has the authority—a board or what?

Mr. HULL. At a post the officer commanding the post has the initiative.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What report does he make?

Mr. HULL. A board of officers is convened, but the initiative is with the commander of the post. In the field the commanding general orders the board.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Do the officers in the Quartermaster's Department have anything to do with this?

Mr. HULL. Not necessarily at all, but they may in some cases. They are not members of the board at all.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Can they on their own initiative condemn supplies?

Mr. HULL. No.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. If the gentleman will permit me, I simply desire to say that the criticism of my colleague from Indiana is directed against the contingent amount here. I want to ask if a large amount could be wasted out of that appropriation if the whole sum were wasted?

Mr. HULL. If every dollar were wasted, it would not make up the amount that has been mentioned in a hundred years, the amounts referred to are so small.

Mr. OLMSTED. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. I wish to ask a little information in reference to these two particular paragraphs. There seems to be two items for the purchase of special electrical apparatus, one for the department of electricity, $2,400, and $2,700 for special apparatus and materials for the electrician-sergeants' division. What is the difference between the department of electricity and the electricians' division? Why are there two items?

Mr. HULL. They are for equipping the school; one is required for noncommissioned officers and the other for commissioned officers.

Mr. OLMSTED. Can not both use the same apparatus?

Mr. HULL. No; that is not done. They have separate rooms, separate apparatus; and it is not of the same order, either. One is a higher grade teaching than the other. One is a post-graduate course and the other is practically a primary school.

Mr. OLMSTED. Both are necessary?

Mr. HULL. Yes. They never educate the privates and officers together, and they could not in this case.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is there any board or officer of the War Department to purchase general supplies or equipment for the Army?

Mr. HULL. It is specialized. There are officers in the Commissary Department whose duty it is to inspect all provisions for the Army. There are officers in the Quartermaster's Department whose duty it is to inspect all supplies bought for the Quartermaster's Department. They have certain officers whose duty it is to inspect cloth. They go to the mills and inspect the cloth, and watch the manufacture in many cases. We have others whose duty it is and who are trained in the selecting of horses; others who are experts in the manufacture of shoes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. What about the purchase of new and alleged useful inventions?

Mr. HULL. That does not come under this committee, and I have no knowledge of that.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. What committee has control of that subject?

Mr. HULL. The Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. OLMSTED. What officer purchases the electrical apparatus?

Mr. HULL. The commanding officer at Fort Totten, under the direction of Chief of Artillery.

Mr. OLMSTED. What officer?

Mr. HULL. The colonel of artillery, or the brigadier-general here in the Department, who is the official head of the Artillery Corps.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER.

Signal Service of the Army: For expenses of the Signal Service of the Army, as follows: Purchase, equipment, and repair of field electric telegraphs, signal equipments and stores, binocular glasses, telescopes, heliostats, and other necessary instruments, including necessary meteorological instruments for use on target ranges; war balloons; telephone apparatus (exclusive of exchange service) and maintenance of the same; electrical installations and maintenance at military posts; fire control and direction apparatus and material for field artillery; maintenance and repair of military telegraph lines and cables, including salaries of civilian employees, supplies, and general repairs, and other expenses connected with the duty of collecting and transmitting information for the Army, by telegraph or otherwise, $200,000: Provided, That until June 30, 1907, the line receipts of the Alaskan military cable and telegraph system may be utilized in making such extensions to the system as may be approved by the President as a military necessity, such extensions to be reported to Congress by the Secretary of War.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order against two provisions of this paragraph. First, on page 5, line 1, "fire control and direction apparatus and material for field artillery;" and again, against the provision in line 7, of the same page, "Provided, That until June 30, 1907, the line receipts of the Alaskan military cable and telegraph system may be utilized in making such extensions to the system as may be approved by the President as a military necessity, such extensions to be reported to Congress by the Secretary of War."

Mr. HULL. Does the gentleman desire to say anything on the point of order?

Mr. LITTAUER. I desire to be heard.

Mr. HULL. I desire to address the Chair on the point of order. I will wait until the gentleman from New York gets through.

Mr. LITTAUER. The first provision relates to fire control and direction apparatus and material for field artillery. The jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Military Affairs in connection with field artillery has been repeatedly decided in favor of the Committee on Appropriations. Fire control is a new provision, now appropriated for on the fortifications bill, and is directly in charge of the Committee on Appropriations. An appropriation for this identical purpose has already been provided for in the fortifications appropriation bill already passed this year, just as it has been provided for for three years last passed.

Now, as to the proviso in line 7, the provision that the——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask whether "fire control" refers to appliances for the field artillery?

Mr. LITTAUER. It directly so states.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked it as a question of interpretation.

Mr. LITTAUER. It means the machinery in connection with fire control of field artillery—appliances to the guns.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Before the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] proceeds, Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to make a suggestion with reference to this item?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear from the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] further if he desires to further address the Chair.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I understood the gentleman from New York to say that he was through.

Mr. LITTAUER. I am through with regard to that provision.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] is recognized.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is true that this system of fire control of field artillery is a system which has probably had its chief existence since the commencement of the Russian and Japanese war, but the system of fire control of seacoast artillery, recently devised, has always been construed to be exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Appropriations has the right to authorize the purchase or construction of the field guns, and the fortifications bill, which has but recently passed the House, contained the appropriation not only for the mountain, field, and siege guns, but for the fire control of the mobile artillery. It is exactly analogous to the system of fire control of the seacoast artillery. It is an adjunct of the field artillery. It is simply the means by which it is utilized. It bears identically the same relation to the field artillery that the fire control bears to the seacoast artillery. From the time of the invention of fire control for field artillery the appropriation for it has been carried in the fortifications bill, along with the guns which are provided for by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PALMER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. PALMER. I wish the gentleman would tell us what fire control is, anyhow.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Fire control, Mr. Chairman, may be said to be a device by which the guns are operated under a system of triangulation, similar in some respects to range-finding at sea. It is much more effective than range finding at sea, because it is possible to obtain a long horizontal base on which to base the triangulation, and thus it becomes much more accurate than range finding at sea.

Mr. PALMER. It enables you to shoot a man behind a hill?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes. It was utilized at first with the seacoast guns, and the sole jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations has never been questioned as to fire control with reference to seacoast guns. Now, the same principle is applied to the mobile artillery, the purpose of which is a matter solely within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PRINCE. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. PRINCE. You are not objecting to the necessity for the use of these words for the purpose for which it is made?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The matter is covered in the fortification bill, and the House has already voted an appropriation for this matter.

Mr. PRINCE. As I understand the gentleman, it is already provided for?

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question, if he will yield to me.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. This provision is carried in the fortifications bill. Is the amount appropriated in the bill as it passed the House as great as the Department estimated and as much as they want?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I think not.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; and hence they went to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is put in this bill in pursuance of the policy which is pursued by some of the Departments, when they fail to get an appropriation from the proper committee, to go to another committee and get it there. Now, I challenge the gentleman from Iowa——

Mr. HULL. I think that the whole matter should be thrown open when statements of that sort are made, when they are not true.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I challenge the gentleman from Iowa to show to this House any distinction between the relation of fire control of field batteries to the field guns, and the relation of fire control to seacoast guns; and the Committee on Military Affairs has never even claimed that they had a right to appropriate money for fire control of seacoast batteries. If the Appropriations Committee, by having the right to appropriate the money for seacoast guns and field and mountain and siege guns, acquires exclusive jurisdiction of appropriating for fire control of seacoast guns, then surely it also acquires the exclusive right to appropriate money for fire control of the mobile artillery.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, this statement of the gentleman that the Committee on Appropriations refused to make a provision for this, and then the Department came to us for an increased appropriation, is not a correct statement of this item in any sense, for the reason that the appropriation carried by this item is not what was asked by the estimate, but it has come in since for the same purpose. Now, as to the point of order, I suppose the gentleman will admit that at least field artillery is a part of the line of the Army as a matter of fact, and the gentleman will also admit that all provisions for the field artillery come under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs, with the exception of manufacture of the guns.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will not admit that.

Mr. HULL. Will you not admit that it has been frequently settled by the House?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. No; I will not admit that.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman will possess his soul in patience for a few minutes, I will tell him what he will admit. When the division of committees was made this item had been carried in the fortification bill, and was held by the Committee of the Whole House to still belong to the Committee on Appropriations. They thereby virtually overruled one of the provisions of the rules, and the gentleman says now, because of that, they have had jurisdiction of the field artillery. For the last four years the bill has carried a provision for field artillery for the militia, and the members of the Committee on Fortifications have never yet raised the point that it is not properly carried here.

Now, I want to ask——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I want to ask the gentleman a question. Does the gentleman claim that this appropriation is for the militia artillery?

Mr. HULL. Oh, no. If the gentleman can only wait a minute I will tell him what I believe.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will wait cheerfully.

Mr. HULL. I do believe it is absolutely absurd for the gentleman from Iowa or the gentleman from New York to claim that a battery of artillery serving out in the Black Hills is a part of the coast defense of this country. They have never yet appropriated a dollar for fire control for field artillery. They were not asked to do it at this time. The Chief of the Signal Service appeared before us and said that all of this appliance for the field artillery was furnished by him. It is part of the range finding for guns in the field and not for the coast defense in any way, and under the rules there is no question in my mind that it is absolutely in order. It is not an increase of the appropriation. It simply authorizes the use of the ordinary current expenses for the Signal Corps to furnish this requisite appliance for field artillery.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield to me? I wish to call his attention to the provision in the fortification bill which has already passed the House:

For the purchase, manufacture, and test of machine and automatic guns, including their carriages, sights, implements, equipments, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenals.

That provision is carried as a provision in the fortification bill, and the gentleman never raised any question as to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HULL. Well, the gentlemen in the Committee on Appropriations have a very large advantage over all the other Members of the House. They have a large clerical force of accomplished gentlemen who are paid good salaries and who are retained for years regardless of party politics, and they have the time and always proof read every bill that is introduced from another committee, have it red inked, and so they know exactly where to raise a point of order, while the rest of us are at the disadvantage of not having that information furnished us, and in many cases not having the time to carefully read and compare their measures. They slip through all the legislation they can regardless of the jurisdiction or the rights of the committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman is mistaken when he says the Committee on Appropriations have a larger clerical force than his own committee, because the clerical forces of the two committees are identical, and if the gentlemen of that committee pursued the practice that is pursued in the Committee on Appropriations, of retaining their men there regardless of their political affiliation, perhaps they might obtain the same satisfactory service.

Mr. HULL. I just want to call attention to the Book of Estimates, on page 132, under this Office of Signal Service of the Army, where there is a note by Brig. Gen. A. W. Greely, Chief Signal Officer of the Army, in which he says:

The adoption of a system of fire control and direction for the field artillery renders it advisable to insert the italicized words in these estimates, although it is believed that the words "the duty of collecting and transmitting information for the Army by telegraph or otherwise" would cover the case.

And under this appropriation he is proceeding to do the same work that we are now simply putting the words in which specifically authorize it as a part of this appropriation. I understand the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] desires to say a word on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Before the chairman of the committee takes his seat the Chair would like to ask, for information, what committee now has jurisdiction of the appropriation for the horses and the harness for the field artillery?

Mr. HULL. The Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAPRON. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Unless the Chair is ready to rule, I desire to submit some remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] will be recognized first.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, General Greeley has stated this matter with some care, on pages 1 and 2 of the hearing. He states generally that the Signal Corps have to manage this arrangement by which guns shall be pointed in the field; I have seen it in actual work within the past two months, and I think perhaps the Chairman will be enlightened by a statement of how it is done.

Suppose it is desired to shoot at an enemy who is seen from the top of a hill. The guns are not brought to the top of the hill, because then they would be a mark instantly for the enemy. They are placed in a hollow behind where the gunners can shoot over the hill, but can not see the mark at which they are to shoot. Instantly the Signal Corps, who now ask this appropriation, lay a telegraph line which operates by telephone from the battery of guns up to the observing point on the top of the hill, where the Signal Corps have taken their stand. There they have an instrument, a small spyglass that is leveled like a transit, by which they can take sight on the object to be shot at; and likewise we will say on a steeple in the rear, and they thus get the angle between the line of fire from the point on the top of the hill and the line back to the steeple. Then they know, or measure the distance, from that observation point to the gun's at one side in the hollow. They then calculate upon that distance, that the lines to the steeple and to the enemy will make a certain different angle at the gun from what they did at the top of the hill, and so the man down the hill having a small instrument, a telescope or transit like that used at the top of the hill, sights back upon the steeple and forward at the angle that he is directed to take by telephone, shoots over the hill at that angle, and without seeing his mark, hits that mark.

It is those instruments which are used by the Signal Service in the field which gentlemen here say belong to the fortifications appropriation. In fortifications all that work is done by fixed telescopes, instruments put in houses or at fixed points, and managed by the artillery. In the field that direction is given by the Signal Corps and by no other corps, and this provision, as explained by General Greeley, is to allow the Signal Corps to provide themselves not with fortification artillery, but with telescopic sights fitted with small graduated circles, which will tell them how to direct the guns in the field, how to shoot, and with the like sights to be put upon the guns or set near the guns, which will enable them to fulfill those directions. Now, that is all there is about it. If these implements are not implements of active warfare of the most active kind, such as belong to a moving army, I know nothing about military matters. It is that implement of the work of the Signal Corps which they are authorized by this bill to purchase from time to time.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PARKER. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Does the gentleman understand that the fortification bill only includes seacoast guns?

Mr. PARKER. I contend——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Does not the gentleman know that it provides and appropriates for field artillery?

Mr. PARKER. For the manufacture of the field artillery, but it ought not to be extended beyond the guns and machinery for their manufacture. The Signal Corps get their guns and all their equipment and everything with which they operate by this bill from this committee, and this is only one of the means of operating the artillery.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Does this fire control of field artillery bear the same relation to the field guns as it does to the seacoast battery?

Mr. PARKER. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Is the seacoast fire control installed by the Signal Corps?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. In large measure it is installed by the Signal Corps, as it is in the artillery.

Mr. PARKER. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Signal Corps installs the submarine defense and the fire control?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It installs the telautograph, the telephone, and all the appliances.

Mr. PARKER. The gentleman will not dispute me that all the means for the operation of the field artillery was appropriated for by the Army bill?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Jersey yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. PARKER. The gentleman from Texas is entitled to the floor in his own right.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I thought the gentleman from New Jersey had closed. Mr. Chairman, the bill and the item under discussion contains this language: "And other expenses connected with the duty of collecting and transmitting information for the Army, by telegraph or otherwise." In a footnote in the Book of Estimates, submitted by General Greely, it says that, although asking for the language to which exception has been taken, under the language which is in the bill and which has been in previous bills, the same work of collecting and transmitting information can go on as heretofore, and that embraces the kind of information necessary to control the fire. And there is some little light on the matter in the hearings, which I will read:

The CHAIRMAN. The estimates were for fire control and direction, but it is not so in the bill.
General GREELY. That comes under the head of collecting and transmitting information. That is what it is for.
The CHAIRMAN. It comes in here in this appropriation.
General GREELY. Yes; for field batteries, but not for coast defense.
The CHAIRMAN. And for field artillery.
General GREELY. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. You do not put it in because you can not spend any of this money.
General GREELY. We spend it largely for transmitting information.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, if this were brought to the consideration of the Chair as a novel question, it seems to me that on the merits of the discussion the jurisdiction of appropriating for fire control and for field guns ought to be left to the Committee on Military Affairs, which is charged with the duty of legislating for the maintenance of the military establishment and making its appropriations generally. But I respectfully contend that this House has virtually settled this question on the precedents. There is no dispute by the gentleman who is chairman of this committee that the Committee on Appropriations to-day appropriates for the field guns of the Army, whether they are used in the field or at the fortifications. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] argues that because the Committee on Appropriations neglected to make a point of order against the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs in appropriating for field guns for the militia that that neglect operates to confer jurisdiction on the Committee on Military Affairs for field guns elsewhere. I have no doubt the Committee on Appropriations by raising the point of order could have successfully asserted its jurisdiction over the appropriations for field guns for the militia.

Now, if the question is settled as to the right of the Committee on Appropriations to appropriate money for field guns, that seems to carry with it the power to appropriate money for all auxiliaries for the field guns, and fire control is one of the necessary auxiliaries for that purpose. Therefore it seems to me, and this discussion has developed the fact, that the same Department officer has gone to two committees of this House, has asked for the appropriations from the one, and having these demands satisfied in part, he has gone to another committee and renewed his demands there and had the balance of his demands satisfied by that committee.

That illustrates a very unfortunate condition of affairs, which the Chair ought not to perpetuate by its ruling. A ruling should be made here which should decide once and for all the power of appropriation over this entire subject, so that in future two committees of the same House should not be appropriating money for the same purpose.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. I do.

Mr. LACEY. The Committee on Appropriations having provided a sufficient amount for that portion of this work as may be needed on the coast defenses, why does that preclude another committee from reporting enough for the other branch, inasmuch as the Signal Officer has seen fit to divide his estimates, so much for coast defenses, so much for field artillery? Why does that exhaust the subject?

Mr. SLAYDEN. He distinctly states this is not for coast defenses.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the Appropriations Committee has already exercised its power over the subject of field batteries and field guns. Now, then, as the fire-control apparatus is used in connection with the field guns, it would seem that the jurisdiction ought not to be divided, so that one committee should appropriate for the field guns and another committee appropriate for the fire-control apparatus, which is indispensable for the use of those field guns.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, the committee to which the gentleman belongs has especial charge of fortifications and knows the wants of fortifications. When an estimate is made for range finding for fortifications, the committee may know how much is necessary. When it comes to field artillery operated in the field, that committee has no opportunity of knowing.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. But we have sole jurisdiction of that.

Mr. LACEY. And the other committee has the knowledge and can say how much ought to be appropriated.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is begging the question. If the Chair should decide that the Committee on Appropriations had sole jurisdiction, it would follow as a matter of course that the Departments would go before the Committee on Appropriations and give to that committee the necessary information. Of course the bureau could go to the Committee on Appropriations quite as well as it could go to the Committee on Military Affairs, and I assume that the Committee on Appropriations could understand the statement made by a gentleman from the Department quite as well perhaps as the gentlemen who compose the Committee on Military Affairs. I do not believe it is a particularly difficult subject, but it seems to me that the effect of the ruling of the Chair establishing the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs would be to make this absurd division in the practice of appropriations, that the Committee on Appropriations would expend the money for the creation of the field guns, while the Committee on Military Affairs would expend the money for the fire-control apparatus used in connection with those field guns. And now that it has been indisputably established by precedents of the House that the Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction over the field guns, it seems to me that jurisdiction over this other matter, which is auxiliary, should naturally fall within the power of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. If I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN] correctly, he says that as the Committee on Appropriations makes the appropriation for the field guns—and that, I suppose, is the manufacture of field guns—that it ought to appropriate for all the auxiliary attachments of those field guns. Now, if that be true, ought not the Appropriations Committee to appropriate for the horses that haul the field guns? They certainly are attachments, and also the harness that goes on the horses and the powder that is fired in the field guns. That certainly is one of the very necessary auxiliaries of field guns. Really it seems to me that the gentleman from Massachusetts has satisfied the Chair that it is very necessary just now that the Chair should show by its ruling what an absurd position the gentleman from Massachusetts has taken, when, if his contention be true, the Appropriations Committee next year will claim that they ought to appropriate for the forage that goes to feed the horses and the rations that feed the men, holding that such are appliances to the field artillery. They are just as much appliances as those things which control the fire of the field artillery. The question is a rather long one, but the gentleman can answer it categorically.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. The gentleman seems to have answered his own question.

Mr. FITZGERALD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Massachusetts concluded?

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. I can not say anything more, Mr. Chairman, except in repetition of what I have already said. I have concluded.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in the fortifications bill that passed the House provision was made for the manufacture of cannon, carriages, ammunition, range finders, and other instruments for fire control in field batteries.

Under two decisions, which are found on page 497 of the Digest, it has been held that the Committee on Appropriations and not the Committee on Military Affairs has jurisdiction for field guns and their appurtenances. The carriages for field guns are part of the appurtenances, ammunition is an appurtenance of field guns, and so are instruments for fire control and range finders. This language, to which exception is taken by means of the point of order raised by the gentleman from New York, is new language in this bill. The paragraph has heretofore been identical with the pending paragraph excepting this provision "for fire control and direction apparatus and material for field artillery." There can be no question that that language covers the identical appurtenances for field batteries which is covered by the language "range finders and other instruments for fire control in field batteries." The War Department submitted to the Committee on Appropriations estimates for appropriations necessary under this item, and the House passed a bill including what was deemed necessary for that purpose during the next fiscal year, but in order to obtain authority to use another fund this language is incorporated in this provision. Whatever may have been the reason for the elimination of the horses and harness, I submit that horses and harness used to drag these guns are not at all in a similar position to the carriages and other implements which would be designated appurtenances which, under the rulings in the Digest, have been held to belong to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. KEIFER. I want him to state, as he has the bill in his hand relating to coast defense and fortifications, whether the field artillery referred to in that bill does not relate to field guns which are used in fortifications along the coast?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why, Mr. Chairman, I called the attention of the committee to this provision in the fortifications bill, "for the purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition for machine and automatic guns, and for mountain, field, and siege cannon, including the necessary experiments in connection therewith and machinery necessary for its manufacture at the arsenals." The manufacture of all ordnance excepting the reserve guns, which were supplied for the artillery, has always been under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KEIFER. But still you do not answer my question. The question is whether field artillery is not used to some extent in connection with coast fortifications, and that the provision that was made for the control of the firing of these guns did not relate to that artillery?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not at all, because there is no mountain artillery used in connection with coast defense.

Mr. KEIFER. I am not talking about mountain artillery, because that is a wholly different thing; but let me ask him further whether or not we have provided for the fire control and direction apparatus for other field guns which were provided for in the bill as reserve field guns and not those that were assigned to the different posts and different positions all over the country where they were expected to act in connection with infantry and cavalry?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My understanding of the bill is we have provided for fire control for all the guns which were authorized heretofore or will be authorized.

Mr. KEIFER. That is not my understanding. My understanding is they went further than the field guns which were authorized to be provided to be used in connection with the fortifications along the coast and also such other field guns as were provided for, either the repairing or renewal or the construction, which were to be reserve field guns.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, I think the gentleman is unquestionably mistaken.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question. I believe the gentleman from New York contended a moment ago that because a provision for field artillery had been in the fortifications bill that that was evidence, at least prima facie, that the Appropriations Committee had jurisdiction of field-artillery appropriations. Is that so?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That and several decisions which were made in the House.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, then, does the gentleman think that because the Committee on Insular Affairs the other day reported a bill for the purchase of those claims on the Island of Batan, it not having any jurisdiction over appropriations, and the bill went through the House, that that could be cited hereafter to show that the Committee on Insular Affairs has jurisdiction of that subject-matter?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, there is a great distinction between——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If the House made an oversight in one case it might make it in another, and it ought not to go as a precedent in either.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman does not distinguish between the different cases that arise. Nobody suggests for an instant that the Committee on Insular Affairs has jurisdiction to make appropriations. The Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Appropriations both have jurisdiction to appropriate, and very frequently there has been a conflict as to the jurisdiction of the two committees regarding appropriations for particular items. It has been decided upon at least two occasions that appurtenances for field batteries belong to the Committee on Appropriations. And in view of those decisions the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has never raised that question since the Fifty-fifth Congress, when it was decided against him on a point of order.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, this discussion has been confined thus far to the question of range finding, but there is a very important point of order made as to the Alaskan military cable that seems not to have been discussed. I would like to say a word on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be glad if the gentlemen would confine their remarks on the point of order to the first point raised.

Mr. LACEY. I do not care to say anything about the first point, but the second point that was made at the same time I would like to have a word upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be glad to hear from the gentleman from Iowa after the Chair has ruled on the first point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the importance of this question arises from the fact that because of some obscurity in the line of demarkation, or the line that should be drawn between the jurisdiction of these two committees, we have the Departments first going to one committee and then to another committee in the event of their failing to secure what they ask for in the committee to which they first made their application. In this same bill we have a provision for the purchase of a cable ship. We have also another provision for submarine defense at San Francisco, both of which propositions were submitted to the Committee on Appropriations and rejected and subsequently inserted in this bill by the Committee on Military Affairs. Hence it is important, Mr. Chairman, to distinctly define the line that should mark the jurisdiction of these two committees, so that when they come before one and are refused what they ask for they can not run to another committee and claim that that committee has jurisdiction of the subject-matter which they did not succeed in getting in the appropriation bill before another committee.

Now, the Committee on Appropriations appropriates the money for field artillery, including carriages. They also appropriate money for fire control of field artillery, because it is a necessary auxiliary or appurtenance to the operation of the gun itself. Now, to my mind——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] permit the Chair to ask a question right there as to how long the Congress has so appropriated for the fire control of field guns?

Mr. TAWNEY. My recollection is it is about three or four years. Fire control of field artillery is a modern instrumentality or invention. It is not one that has been in use for fifty or seventy-five years. Improvements in respect to the firing of artillery are constantly being made. Range finders have been appropriated for for some years, but fire control of field artillery for only about three years.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Right in line with the question of the instances which the gentleman has in mind, has the Committee on Appropriations exercised the jurisdiction to appropriate for fire control for field guns?

Mr. TAWNEY. It has. The Committee on Military Affairs has never inserted language of this kind in any appropriation bill. If money has been used for that purpose it was paid out of appropriations which did not express the purpose for which this appropriation is expressed here. So that as to anything that pertains to the gun itself I maintain that the committee that has heretofore exercised that jurisdiction should have jurisdiction over everything of that character.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. TAWNEY. That which pertains to the operation of the gun; that which pertains to the actual firing of the gun or placing or hauling of the gun, or the forage for the animals used in hauling the guns——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And the man behind the gun.

Mr. TAWNEY (continuing). "And the man behind the gun" is an entirely different proposition. That pertains to the operation of the instrumentality. The only jurisdiction claimed by the Committee on Appropriations is jurisdiction covering the manufacture and purchase of the instrumentality itself.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if he has seen General Greely's statement in the hearing before the committee on January 8, 1906, in which he states the item objected to in this bill for fire control, etc., was covered for all practical purposes by the language which has been in previous Army appropriation bills?

Mr. TAWNEY. It may be practically, but not actually.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But actually, he said.

Mr. TAWNEY. It never was brought in so that the Committee on Appropriations could raise the question of jurisdiction.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit me to read what General Greely said in the note to the estimate?

The adoption of a system of fire control and direction for the field artillery renders it advisable to insert the italicised words in these estimates, although it is believed that the words "the duty of collecting and transmitting information for the Army by telegraph or otherwise" would cover the case.

That language has been in several of the bills prior to this.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is simply the opinion of General Greely.

Mr. SLAYDEN. They have operated under it and done that very thing.

Mr. TAWNEY. They have operated under a great many other appropriations, possibly, made, but in the dark.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does the gentleman from Texas claim that that language would cover this kind of an expenditure?

Mr. TAWNEY. He says General Greely says so.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But does the gentleman from Texas claim it?

Mr. SLAYDEN. They have done it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, about where the line should be drawn. It should be drawn between the thing itself and the operation of the instrumentality. Heretofore the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations in the matter of appropriating money for the purchase of field artillery, including carriages—including everything that was necessary, except for the actual use—has never been questioned. If the claim of the gentleman from Iowa is right, or if his contention that because field artillery is manned and operated by the Army is correct, then there are a great many things that the Committee on Appropriations now and always has appropriated for that properly belonged to the Committee on Military Affairs. In the Fifty-sixth Congress this specific question was submitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs on the one hand and by Mr. Moody, of the Committee on Appropriations, on the other hand.

Touching so much of House Document No. 291, first session Fifty-sixth Congress, as refers to the Rock Island Armory, Rock Island, Ill., and to Springfield Armory, Springfield, Mass.; and

Touching so much of the estimate of $750,000 for infantry, cavalry, and artillery equipment, submitted on page 135 of the Book of Estimates for the fiscal year 1901, as includes machinery, tools, and fixtures for their manufacture at the arsenals; and

Touching so much of the estimate of $1,100,000 for the manufacture of arms, submitted on page 136 of the Book of Estimates for the fiscal year 1901, as includes machinery, tools, and fixtures for their manufacture—

Be vacated, and that the same shall be placed on the Speaker's table for reference.

Now, that brought squarely before the Speaker of the House of Representatives the question of whether or not these instrumentalities and their manufacture should be appropriated for by the Committee on Military Affairs or by the Committee on Appropriations. And the Speaker, after considering the question and the brief filed by Mr. Moody and the brief filed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], decided in favor of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations.

This particular class of appropriations has been the subject of controversy between the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Appropriations of the House ever since the jurisdiction over the appropriations for the military establishment was taken from the Committee on Appropriations, and in every instance has that controversy resulted in favor of the Committee on Appropriations retaining jurisdiction of all appropriations for the purchase of the instrumentalities necessary for fortifications and field artillery. If you enlarge the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs as proposed, to what extent will the Department in the future first go to one committee and failing to secure what they want, or all it wants, go to the Military Committee, which, because of its peculiar relation to the Department, represents the Department more than the House or the Government?

It is important, therefore, Mr. Chairman, in the consideration of this question to not confuse the operation of the instrumentalities of war with their manufacture or with their purchase. In the latter case the Committee on Appropriations claims jurisdiction, and has always exercised it, while in the former it does neither.

The claim of the Committee on Appropriations is not made because that committee desires to have any more work than it now has, but because the exercise of that jurisdiction in the past has resulted beneficially, and enables the House to keep a check on the appropriations for that part of the military establishment which is constantly seeking increase of appropriations for the implements of war. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, with all respect to the gentlemen who support the point of order, their contention amounts essentially to an effort to make an erroneous custom of the House and an erroneous ruling of ex-Speaker Henderson suffice to overrule the plain letter and spirit of the law.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Has not that been the previous ruling of previous Speakers? Did it not simply confirm former rulings?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is immaterial, in my judgment, how many erroneous rulings have been made, if they were erroneous.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. But the gentleman——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have not heard any gentleman of the Committee on Appropriations assert that the original ruling was correct. I do not think that one of them as a lawyer will arise and say that by any ordinary fair rule of interpreting language the Rules of the House of Representatives confer jurisdiction upon the Committee on Appropriations over this matter of field artillery or of apparatus for use in connection with it. Here is the language of the only rule giving jurisdiction over proposed legislation to the Committee on Appropriations:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows, viz:

Subjects relating—

To appropriations of the revenue for the support of the Government as herein provided, namely—

For legislative, executive, and judicial expenses;

That is not field artillery—

For sundry civil expenses—

That is not field artillery—

For fortifications—

That is not field artillery—

Coast defenses—

That is not field artillery—

For the District of Columbia—

That is not field artillery—

For pensions—

That is not field artillery—

And for all deficiencies—

That is not field artillery—

To the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question there?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. You have said that no member of the Committee on Appropriations would claim that sundry civil expenses covered field artillery; but I say to the gentleman that at the time the Military Affairs Committee first obtained jurisdiction of the military appropriation bill that the fortifications items were carried in the sundry civil bill, and that when the rule gave the Appropriations Committee the right to pass a sundry civil bill, that bill then included not only seacoast fortifications, but all the mobile artillery; and therefore, notwithstanding the gentleman's assertion that sundry civil expenses do not include fortifications, I tell him that his statement is in conflict with the appropriations in this House from the earliest time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I did not say anything about the sundry civil bill not including fortifications.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If the statement of the gentleman from Iowa is correct, does it not include field artillery as well as fortifications?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If the gentleman will permit me to conclude what I have to say, then I shall be pleased to answer any questions. The jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations, if it have any jurisdiction, comes from that paragraph.

Where does the Committee on Military Affairs get its jurisdiction? From another paragraph, which I will read:

All bills relating to the military establishment and the public defense, including appropriations for its support * * * to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The "military establishment" includes three principal branches, namely, the infantry, the cavalry, and the artillery.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is the "military establishment" of the United States within the meaning of this paragraph of the rule. Not the Navy, because there is a separate paragraph which applies exclusively to appropriations for naval affairs; but the term "military establishment" as here used includes three principal branches: the infantry, the cavalry, and the artillery—the field artillery—but not the artillery in coast defenses nor the artillery in fortifications, for both of these are specifically mentioned in the first paragraph that I read, the paragraph relating to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will in a moment. Mr. Chairman, if, under this rule, field artillery is a part of the "military establishment" as thus defined, then appropriations for anything which goes to assist the field artillery in the "public defense" by enabling that artillery to fire more accurately belongs properly to the Committee on Military Affairs, which has jurisdiction of appropriations for the "military establishment."

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In a moment. And the fact that, in clear violation of the rules, the House has heretofore permitted this appropriation to go to the wrong committee ought not now to suffice to withhold the appropriation from the jurisdiction of the proper committee, any more than a bad decision of the Supreme Court of the United States ought forever to bind that court against its better judgment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin contend that the uniform practice of the House, based on the interpretation of this rule, is entitled to no consideration and should be ignored entirely in the determination of the identical question that is involved here?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I hold that it should not be allowed to control any man's judgment, if he honestly believes, after careful study of the written law, that the practice of the House, or the rulings of the Speaker, have been in plain violation of the law.

Mr. TAWNEY. In deciding this identical question I will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. Blount, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, stated the principle which governed his decision as follows:

An examination of the statutes and of the practice of the House for a long series of years shows that prior to the adoption of the present rules the rules simply assigned the work of appropriations to the Committee on Appropriations. That committee subdivided their work into various general appropriation bills, not by virtue of any rule of the House, but for their own convenience. They were designated as the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, the sundry civil bill, the fortification bill, the District of Columbia bill, the pension bill, the deficiency bill, the military bill, the naval bill, and the bill in relation to post-offices and post-roads, etc.

The subject-matter of these several bills was designated by the Committee on Appropriations itself, and the Chair thinks that the only way of ascertaining the nature of these bills is by an examination of the substance of them. Under these designations they have been crystallized in the practice of the House until they have a significance as pregnant as the strongest language could give them. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 100, p. 1005.)

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. What is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. TAWNEY. I am reading from a brief by Mr. Moody, submitted to the Fifty-sixth Congress, when this identical question was up and was decided at that time by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Now, if we are going to divide the jurisdiction in this manner so that it is competent for a Department in the event of their failing to secure what they want in one committee, to enable them to go to another and secure what they have been refused in the first instance, it will lead to infinitely more reckless practices and duplication of appropriations in the future than heretofore. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, I think the line should be drawn between the purchase or manufacture of the instrumentality and its operation. This is a logical division, it is reasonable, one that has heretofore obtained, and, I think, it is one that ought now to obtain.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the mistake made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] consists in treating this question as an open question. It seems to me that it is settled on the precedents, and I am perfectly willing to admit, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, that if it were not settled by precedents that the jurisdiction of this subject should properly be left to the Committee on Military Affairs. I think that that is true not only on this subject, but a great many others that are now within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations. But we may and ought to attach a great deal of value to the precedents in this House.

Now, the gentleman from Rhode Island asked if this committee were given power to appropriate for the purpose of fire-control apparatus simply because that was used in connection with field guns, why should not the Committee on Appropriations be given power to appropriate for the horses and the artillery and equipment.

He believes that because there is a close relation between the guns and the artillery equipment that one committee ought to appropriate for both, and I am willing to admit that if it were a new question that one committee should appropriate for both, but a line of division has been created by the precedents in this House. For example, in 1900 it was ruled that while the Committee on Military Affairs had power to appropriate for infantry and artillery equipment, the jurisdiction of appropriations for machinery, tools, and fixtures for their manufacture at the arsenals and armories remained in the Committee on Appropriations. So that the Committee on Appropriations has the power to spend money for the machinery, tools, and fixtures for the manufacture and repair of the equipment and supplies, and the Military Affairs Committee has power to appropriate for the very things which are manufactured by the machinery, tools, and fixtures. Therefore you could not get a closer relation than that which exists between the machine and the thing which is created by the machine, and yet this House, by its precedents, confers jurisdiction upon one committee over the machine and upon another committee over the thing that the machine creates.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman speaks of appropriations for machinery for the manufacture of guns having been admitted to be under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations. The rules say that everything relating to the "military establishment" and "public defense" shall go to the Military Committee. Nobody would claim, I think, that the machines to manufacture guns are part of the military establishment. You can not cripple an enemy with a machine with which you manufacture the gun unless, perhaps, you might take a monkey wrench and hit him on the head with it. The machine with which you manufacture the gun is, of course, no part of the weapon with which we conduct the public defense. Such machinery is not part of the "military establishment." Therefore, the appropriations for those machines would very properly go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I disagree with the gentleman. I can not see any logical distinction between the power to appropriate for a machine in a Government arsenal and the things which the machine creates, or I could not, if we were treating it as an original question. It seems to me, if it were to be decided originally, that jurisdiction ought to be conferred on the Committee on Military Affairs, but if the statement made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] is verified by the facts in the record, namely, that since 1902 the Committee on Appropriations has exercised jurisdiction over apparatus for fire control, then it seems to me that this is a settled question and can not be decided by recourse to the logical relation between the gun and the apparatus used in connection with the guns.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It is res adjudicata.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, just a word. In regard to buildings and machinery there is a law on the statute books that requires all buildings that cost to exceed $20,000 to have estimates submitted therefor to the Congress of the United States, and under the rule of the House and its procedure all buildings even for the Army that cost in excess of $20,000 that are built from estimates submitted have always come from the Committee on Appropriations. But on this proposition of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] of the distinction between the two committees, I desire to say to him and to this House, and I hope to the Chairman with some effect, that the tendency has been for the Committee on Appropriations to enlarge its jurisdiction from year to year by putting in items over which they absolutely have no jurisdiction under the rules of the House. Now, what is the jurisdiction given? They have jurisdiction for fortifications and coast defenses, and that is all in the military establishment. Under the decisions shortly after the change of committees from one committee to various committees of the House by a decision of the House they have jurisdiction over the manufacture of cannon, and I think that it would be impossible for the two committees to have joint jurisdiction over its manufacture. But, Mr. Chairman, this language here is for something that is new of itself. This language here is not an enlargement of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs; it is simply carrying out what the jurisdiction has always been—that of jurisdiction over the Signal Corps of the Army. In the coast fortifications the Signal Corps has not the same control that it has here. In the coast fortifications, where everything is fixed, nothing is movable, except as they may move a range finder from one place to another to command different parts of the harbor; it is operated by the artillery, it is installed by the engineers.

In this case the Signal Corps furnishes all the instruments; it furnishes the men with the Army to operate the electrical appliances. It is not an increase of expenses with us; it is not reaching out after more jurisdiction; it is simply retaining what the plain letter of the rules of the House and the procedure of the House would give us, except that for the last two years they have put in their bill this language for field artillery. But, Mr. Chairman, suppose they had put in their bill last year—and a large majority of their bills go through without scrutiny as to new legislation—suppose they had put in their bill so many thousand dollars for purchasing horses for artillery and no one raised the point of order, I suppose then they would come up the next year and say, when we appropriate for horses for cavalry and artillery, that they had jurisdiction over the artillery, and here was a double appropriation.

Mr. LITTAUER. Will the gentleman not admit that the very provision sought to be taken care of by this item in the Military Affairs bill here to-day is covered by the provision in the fortification bill that passed, which says, "For range finders and other instruments for fire control in field batteries?"

Mr. HULL. I am not raising the question of what the gentleman's committee has done. The gentleman's committee has done it. I am sorry I did not know it sooner, or I would have tried to keep him from it. It is in the estimates this year. I have never looked at the gentleman's estimates before, as I try to keep well within my rights and hoped others would do the same.

Mr. PALMER. Well, is this a double appropriation?

Mr. HULL. No.

Mr. PALMER. Has not the money been appropriated in another bill?

Mr. HULL. We have not increased the appropriation one dollar. The testimony of General Greely was that in the language as it has been in our bill for the last twenty years practically they could take care of this business, but he believed it ought to be more explicit. He did not ask any increase, because he said that the amount carried in the bill was sufficient to carry all these items.

Mr. PALMER. I understood the gentleman from New York on the Appropriation Committee to say their bill does contain an item which covers this exact expense. Now, if that bill contains an item covering fire control, why is there not a double appropriation?

Mr. HULL. It covered guns, artillery and field service.

Mr. LITTAUER. "Range finders and other instruments for fire control in field batteries," and if that provision should go out——

Mr. HULL. I do not think it affects the point of order in any particular, admitting all you say.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to get tangled up in this debate, but I think the trouble is that we appropriate through the two committees for different things under the same name. I do not agree with the gentleman who undertakes to say that the military establishment is composed of infantry, cavalry, and artillery. It is composed of engineers also; it has a Department of Ordnance, Quartermasters, Signal Corps, Commissary, and all these things, and they are appropriated for in this bill. We have a great many other military things. In the fortifications bill we did appropriate for all the guns which were provided, which were liable to be used in connection with the fortifications, and for all other field guns that we were providing for that were to be in reserve. Some were to be rebuilt, some were being made anew, but I do not think the Appropriation Committee undertook to appropriate for the field guns now used with the infantry, cavalry, and artillery, and there is where the confusion comes in. Fortifications, properly speaking, are also a part of the military establishment of the United States, but in this committee division it is apparently very inconsistent.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, at the time that the right to report appropriation bills was given to the Committee on Military Affairs various expenses of the military defense were carried in the sundry civil bill, such as provision with reference to the making of machinery for use in the arsenals and other items. There was also a fortifications bill and there was an Army bill. When the rule was adopted to transfer a portion of the right to report appropriation bills to the Committee on Military Affairs, the language used was not so clear as might have been desired, but there is an unbroken line of precedents holding that what was transferred to the Committee on Military Affairs was the right to bring in appropriation bills for these classes of items which had theretofore been covered by the Army bill as reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

There is absolutely no conflict in the authority as to how the jurisdiction is to be determined. In this particular case something of difficulty may arise because the specific item under consideration being that of fire control is one which was not provided for by any committee prior to the division of the appropriations between the committees. The system of fire control was not known in those days. No system of fire control was then devised. It first was devised as an adjunct to the seacoast guns. Nobody has ever claimed to this hour that we ought to have given that to the Committee on Military Affairs, yet that is installed and that is operated by men who are paid by appropriations in the Army bill. The distinguished gentleman in charge of the bill has said that his committee reports the appropriations for the Signal Corps. If he means that they report the appropriations for the payment of the officers and enlisted men, then that statement is true. If he means that they bring in appropriations for those things constructed by the Signal Corps, the statement is not true without great modification and much of limitation. Very much of the money carried in the fortifications bill is expended by the Signal Corps; the work installed by it is operated by the artillery. The mere fact that it is operated by the artillery, which is paid out of this Army appropriation, has never been held to confer upon the Committee on Military Affairs the power to appropriate for the constructive work or the preparation of these things to be used by the artillery. Now, the application of fire control to field artillery was later than its application to seacoast artillery, and yet as early as 1903 the Committee on Appropriations was bringing before this House bills carrying money for fire control of field artillery. Why? Because we are charged with the duty of supplying the artillery with their implements of warfare, not with the horses, not with the harness, but with the guns, the carriages, their adjuncts and appurtenances.

We have carried these appropriations for four successive years, and it has never been whispered until this morning that the jurisdiction to appropriate for this item was in the Committee on Military Affairs. There has never been a line in an Army bill with reference to this subject except, as gentlemen say, that it was included under the general description of electric or telegraphic means of communication. For all these years the Committee on Appropriations has been in undisputed and sole possession of the jurisdiction to make these appropriations. The estimates are sent to the Committee on Appropriations for items for fire control of the mobile artillery. We report a bill out and it passes this House. It does not carry as much as the War Department would have liked. Then comes a bill from the Committee on Military Affairs putting in language never used in that bill in its history before and covering identically these same items that have been carried in the fortifications bill for four long years and making a large additional sum available to them.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Two hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. If there be aught in precedent, it is with the Committee on Appropriations on this subject. If there be aught in analogy, it is with the Committee on Appropriations on this subject. When the question of fire control of the coast fortifications came up, then was the time for the Committee on Military Affairs to say they were entitled to appropriate for that item and that it was not an appurtenant or adjunct to a seacoast gun. They never said it; they have not said it to this hour. They have no more to do with buying cannon for the line of the Army than they have to do with buying a seacoast gun. The power to appropriate for guns and carriages for the mobile artillery is just as exclusively in the Appropriation Committee as the power to appropriate for seacoast cannon. And when identically the same adjunct is applied to the mobile artillery as applied to the seacoast gun the Committee on Military Affairs, after waiting four long years, suddenly discovers that it has jurisdiction to duplicate the appropriations brought in from the Committee on Appropriations for this item, and thus give double appropriation to the War Department for this single purpose. We have, then, this matter settled by the usage of this House at least for four years. We have got it settled by analogy to seacoast fire control. The Committee on Appropriations has no ambition to acquire new labor, but it does protest against the Military Committee, after acquiescing for all of these years in the exclusive jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations, and then after an abundance of money has been voted by this House for this purpose, coming in here with a bill giving large additional sums for the same purpose.

Mr. HULL. I will call the attention of the Chair to the estimate submitted this year, on page 132, as the gentleman seems to lay so much stress on the estimates. On page 132 it is specifically submitted to us in that item.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Submitted to both, I grant.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the chairman of the committee on Military Affairs for a little further information. As the Chair understands it, field guns and the heavy siege guns are manufactured at the same armory?

Mr. HULL. They are.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the harness and horses for the field guns are appropriated for by the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. HULL. They are.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask whether this fire control and direction apparatus is movable, aside from any attachment to the guns themselves.

Mr. HULL. It must be in the very nature of things movable, and is furnished by the Signal Corps of the Army. It is never attached to the gun, except for temporary purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] makes the point of order against the words "fire control and direction apparatus and material for field artillery," in lines 1 and 2, on page 5 of the bill, contending that this item of appropriation belongs to the Appropriation Committee and not to the Committee on Military Affairs. This raises the square question of jurisdiction between these two committees. It is a question which has been before the Committee of the Whole and before the House ever since division of the appropriations, in the Forty-ninth Congress, between the various committees now reporting appropriation bills. This is an extremely important question, and the Chair has found it a very delicate one to pass upon, involving not only an interpretation of the rules and the precedents of the House, but also a review of the practice of the committees dating back for many years.

The Chair will state, in the first place, that he does not think the occupant of this chair in Committee of the Whole is called upon to consider, in passing upon such a question as this, the attitude of the Executive Departments toward the various committees of the House.

It appears that an item similar to this has been carried for the past three years in appropriation bills coming from the Committee on Appropriations, and that no point of order has been made against those items. The present occupant of the chair, however, is compelled to find that the Chair ought not to seek shelter behind the undisputed action of the House or committee when he is called upon to decide a point of order according to the law and the precedents.

This question brings before us the history of the separation of the jurisdiction of the Appropriation Committees of the House, and the present occupant of the chair has undertaken to look into it with as much care and as fully as time permitted.

Prior to the Forty-ninth Congress all appropriation bills were framed by the Appropriations Committee, and matters relating to military affairs were scattered, at first apparently indiscriminately, between the sundry civil bill, the military bill, the fortification bill, and, of course, the various deficiency bills. Prior to the Forty-ninth Congress the rules under which authority was given to the Appropriations Committee and the Military Committee were as follows: The rules provided that matters relating to appropriations of the revenue for the support of the Government should go to the Committee on Appropriations, which matters relating to the military establishment and the public defense, other than appropriations for its support should go to the Committee on Military Affairs. When the subdivision and distribution of matters going to the various appropriation committees were made, they were made effective by the rules of the House which have prevailed down to the present time, which were as follows:

Matters relating to appropriation of the revenue for the support of the Government as herein provided, namely, for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses, for sundry civil expenses, for fortifications and coast defense, for the District of Columbia, for pensions, and for all deficiencies, to the Committee on Appropriations.

Matters relating to the military establishment and the public defense, including appropriations for its support, and that of the Military Academy, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The language in the latter rule, it will be seen, is sufficiently broad, if standing by itself, to cover all appropriations relating to the military establishment. In order, therefore, to find out what items are not given to the Military Committee, we must determine what is meant by the language in the rule conferring jurisdiction on the Appropriation Committee, which says: "For fortifications and for coast defense."

The gentleman from Iowa who last addressed the Chair has suggested that in this division of authority the Committee on Military Affairs took only those subjects which the military bill carried under the Appropriation Committee when that committee had charge of all the bills. According to this line of reasoning, then, it would be true, of course, that the Appropriations Committee, under the language, "for fortifications and for coast defense," retains jurisdiction of only those items which previous to the separation had been carried in the fortification bill. This was a matter which so interested the Chair that he took occasion to look through all of the fortification acts from 1885 back to the civil war, that he might discover whether the fortification bills ever carried any items other than those directly connected with the fortifications and with the heavy guns of the coast defenses. But for twenty years prior to the division of jurisdiction the fortification bill carried no items except such as were directly connected with fortifications and coast defenses. Therefore the Chair sought to discover on what theory field guns were given to the Appropriations Committee after the division of jurisdiction and were covered in the fortification bill.

The last decision upon this question was made as late as 1898, on February 5 of that year, the fortification bill then being under consideration in Committee of the Whole. When this paragraph was read, "For steel field guns, $30,000," Mr. HULL, of Iowa, then chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, made the point of order that this provision belonged to the Committee on Military Affairs and not to the Committee on Appropriations. After considerable debate, the Chairman of the committee, Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois, held that the point of order was not well taken, and that the item "for steel field guns, $30,000," belonged to the fortification bill. He referred to certain precedents, which the Chair will allude to. On March 31, 1890, the House being in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and considering the Army appropriation bill, a paragraph for metallic cartridges for field gun batteries and steel shell and shrapnel for artillery guns was under consideration, was read, and Mr. Marcus Brewer, of Michigan, made the point of order that those items were not properly in the Army bill, since they belonged to fortifications and coast defense, and that they belonged to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations. After debate, Mr. Allen, of Michigan, being in the chair, said:

The question presented is of great difficulty and the discussion has not been sufficiently full to entirely satisfy the Chair about the precedents, but the exigencies of the work before the House will not permit further delay.

The practice of the House for the last twenty years preceding the last six years in large part has obtained under different conditions as between committees from those which now exist, and the Chair will confine himself strictly to the rule as he understands it.

He then read the rule prevailing at that time—which still prevails—which the Chair had previously read, and then said:

As the Chair understands this rule, the Committee on Appropriations in this matter is confined strictly to that which pertains to fortifications and coast defenses. The Chair holds that the provision of the bill providing for steel field guns and carriages for the same not used in fortifications nor made for fortifications nor for coast defenses properly goes to the Committee on Military Affairs, and he therefore overrules the point of order.

Immediately, on motion of Mr. JOSEPH G. CANNON, of Illinois, then chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the committee struck out the paragraphs in question from the military bill by a vote of 91 ayes to 57 noes.

On the next day, on April 1, 1890, the Committee of the Whole House had under consideration the fortifications appropriation bill. The item in that bill against which the point of order was made (and I call the attention of the members of the committee especially to these items as enumerated) was for steel field guns, 3.2 caliber, metallic cartridges for field-gun batteries, and steel shell or shrapnel for field guns.

Mr. Cutcheon, of Michigan, made the point of order against the paragraph, and Mr. Payson, of Illinois, decided that the point of order was not well taken and overruled it, as he said, in conformity with the uniform decisions of the House.

The Chair found upon more careful examination a similar decision on the 19th of January, 1899, when Mr. Blount, of Georgia, was in the chair, and a point of order was made by Mr. Cutcheon against this provision for steel forgings for not less than twenty-four 3.6-inch field guns, $24,000. Another point of order on the same bill was made by Mr. Cutcheon against the following paragraph:

One thousand steel shrapnel for field guns; 4,800 projectiles, cast iron, for field guns.

These were on the fortifications bill. The Chair overruled the points of order.

Still, the present occupant of the chair was unable to find the reason why these field guns were appropriated for in the fortifications bill from the Appropriations Committee. But by further reference he found that on February 9, 1887, this matter came before the House and not before the Committee of the Whole. On that day the Speaker laid before the House Senate bill 662, to encourage the manufacture of steel for modern Army ordnance, armor, and other purposes; to provide heavy ordnance adapted to modern Army warfare, and for other purposes. Mr. McAdoo said:

Mr. Speaker, I make the same point of order with reference to this bill that the gentleman from Michigan made with regard to the preceding bill—that under clause 11 of the eleventh rule, which provides that all proposed legislation relating to the military establishment and the public defense, including the appropriations for its support and for that of the Military Academy, should be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and that this bill should be so referred.

The occupant of the chair at that time was Mr. Speaker Carlisle. The colloquy which followed, as shown by the RECORD, was participated in by his great successor as Speaker of the House, the late Speaker Reed. It appears from the colloquy preceding the reference of the bill that both Speaker Carlisle and Mr. Reed, the leader of the minority on the floor, acquiesced in the sending of this bill to the Appropriations Committee.

This occurred in 1887, very soon after the division of bills had been made and matters relating to the military establishment taken from the Appropriations Committee, with the exception of fortifications and coast defenses, and from the provisions of the bill then under consideration it seems very clear to the present occupant of the chair that the reason why Speaker Carlisle and Mr. Reed held that such bills should go to the Appropriations Committee to be considered in the fortifications bill was because the heavy siege guns and the field artillery were both manufactured by the same arsenal. The only ground on which the Appropriations Committee secured authority to appropriate for the field guns was not under the rule, but under the interpretation of the rule and by the decisions of the Speaker of the House and by the Chairmen of the Committee of the Whole. That is as nearly as the Chair has been able to analyze this subject and the disputes between the two committees.

There was no logical reason why field guns should not have been given to the Military Committee under that rule. They could not have been covered in fortifications and coast defenses under the language of the rule. It was only by an interpretation of the rule and by the decisions, as I have said, of the Speaker and of the various chairmen. Now, if we go back and examine these items that have come before the committee and before the House, we will find that they cover, first, the guns themselves, and, second, those matters necessarily appurtenant to the guns, as carriages, shot, and ammunition. The Chair has been referred to no precedent which has held that equipment not appurtenant to the field guns, but connected with their operation, could go to the Appropriations Committee. The Chair has given due weight to the fact that this item has been carried in other Congresses in fortification bills, but the point has never been raised against them, and there are no rulings to guide the judgment of the Chair.

The Chair also gives very great weight to the point so ably made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] that fortification bills have uniformly carried similar items for the coast defenses and for fortifications, and right here is where the Chair thinks is the dividing line, and why it seems to the Chair that this is such a delicate question. The fire control for guns in the coast defense are instrumentalities appurtenant to the coast defense. Fire control, on the other hand, for mobile guns in the field are instrumentalities appurtenant to the Army in its military operations and are not a part of the gun.

The Chair is confirmed in his general opinion by the very exhaustive history referred to by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] setting forth the way in which jurisdiction was given to the Committee on Military Affairs, and by the ruling of the late Speaker Henderson following the able arguments made by Representative Moody, at that time serving on the Appropriations Committee and now Attorney-General, and the present chairman of the Military Affairs Committee. In ruling upon the items that were submitted to him the Speaker said:

> The Chair therefore holds that the appropriations for the manufacture of small arms and equipments for the infantry, cavalry, and artillery at the armories and arsenals are within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs.

As the Chair is informed, respecting the character of this fire-control apparatus, he regards it as an equipment of the artillery establishment and not as connected with or appurtenant to the gun. And therefore this item should not go to the Appropriations Committee, which has jurisdiction of the manufacture of field guns and appurtenances, but to the Military Committee, which takes all those things which are appurtenant to the Army and the public defense. After giving the subject as thorough consideration as the time permitted, and after studying the history of the conflict of jurisdiction involved, the Chair feels constrained to overrule the point of order. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is my desire, in view of the fact that this item is covered by an appropriation of probably $85,000, to move to strike out the words from the bill "fire control and direction apparatus," without reference to the question of jurisdiction. I wish to inquire whether that motion will be in order now or if we shall wait until the second point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it will be in order after the section is perfected. There is a point of order to another part of the same section.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The Chair rules that it would not be in order until the section is perfected?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that will be the better practice.

Mr. LITTAUER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I direct the attention of the Chair to the proviso, lines 7 and 12, page 5, of the bill. This proviso changes existing law. It contravenes the law which declares that all revenues received are to be paid into the Treasury.

Mr. HULL. I think there is no question but it changes the language under which appropriations have been carried heretofore.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will ask the gentleman from Iowa if he has not an amendment to that provision?

Mr. HULL. I have an amendment which meets the judgment of a great many Members of the House, and was submitted by the gentleman from Minnesota, and I will read it:

> Provided, For such extensions of the Alaskan military cable and telegraph system as may be approved by the President as a military necessity, $125,000, to be paid out of amounts heretofore and hereafter received and paid into the Treasury for commercial service over said cable system, the extent of such extension and the cost thereof to be reported to Congress by the Secretary of War.

I think that is also subject to a point of order. It is a change of law; it changes existing law. I think a direct appropriation in this bill for the continuation of the work, making a specific appropriation for a specific line, as we have done in the past for several years, would be in order. If the gentleman will withhold his point of order until I can make an explanation, I will say that it was put in in this way because the governor of the Territory and Members of the House interested in the development of Alaska claimed that there was 70 or 80 miles that should be built to connect an important center where boats are cleared without waiting for the long delay that is now entailed upon them.

I do not believe that that is strictly a military necessity. The original amendment that was submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs was to make the appropriation for extension of the telegraph lines of Alaska without any regard to military necessity. The committee believes that we would have no jurisdiction over the subject unless it was for military purposes, and the language was changed from a specific appropriation for a specific line to giving the President jurisdiction to declare whether it was a military necessity or not. It is a change of law, and I do not propose to argue it. If the gentleman wants to insist on his point of order, I am ready for the Chair to rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I now move to strike from lines 1 and 2, on page 5, the words "fire control and direction apparatus and material for field artillery," those being the words against which the point of order was first laid. I wish simply to state in support of this amendment that the War Department made an estimate under this heading to the Committee on Appropriations of $150,000. After careful consideration we gave them $83,000 for this purpose. The War Department made for this purpose to the Committee on Military Affairs an estimate, as I recall it, of $208,000, and the committee's bill cuts that to $200,000. It does seem to me that, laying aside the question of jurisdiction of these committees, this appropriation having passed this House, a second appropriation, which would make available for this purpose $200,000 more ought not to pass. This system of estimating to more than one committee is certainly a reprehensible one. Under the ruling of the Chair, to which we bow, this appropriation should have been in the Army bill, but the fact remains that the appropriation came in here in the fortifications bill, has passed the House, is now in the Senate, and it is now proposed to give them under this estimate substantially all they ask, in addition to the $85,000 given them by the fortifications bill.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, would it not serve the purpose of the gentleman just as well to move to reduce this item by that amount?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It would serve my purpose just as well to reduce the item, but not knowing definitely as to how much of this item was intended for that specific purpose, it covering other items——

Mr. SLAYDEN. But the gentleman's contention is that the particular item he speaks of was clearly provided for by his committee with an appropriation of $85,000.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. We thought $83,000 was an abundance.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Eighty-three thousand dollars; and that is also covered here. Certainly no harm can be done by striking it out.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The difficulty with the gentleman's suggestion is this—that his item includes much besides fire control.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But the gentleman has been contending that this is a duplicate appropriation.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I am trying to make myself plain. We do not know how much the gentleman's committee understood of this $200,000 was for fire control. Perhaps the gentleman's committee thought only $50,000. I can not tell. We do not want to move to strike out $85,000 from the report of the Committee on Military Affairs, because we don't know whether that is the right sum or not.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But did not the gentleman say that they established before his committee that they required for fire control eighty-three or eighty-five thousand dollars, and has he not contended that this is a duplicate in here?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. We contend that this item would authorize the expenditure of $200,000 for fire control—that is to say, this item, covering many subjects, can be used for any of those subjects by the War Department.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is the paragraph covering many subjects.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes. It might be used all for other purposes; it might be used all for this purpose.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The $85,000 which the gentleman's committee appropriated for fire control could not be used for any other purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It could only be used for instruments of precision, including instruments for fire control.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And if specifically taken out of this appropriation on the motion here in the House——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. But the objection to that is this: It may take too much out of your item.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Not if we duplicate your appropriation.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman's committee may have allowed only $50,000 for fire control, and they may have understood that $150,000 of this was for other purposes. I will ask the gentleman how much of this item was for fire control?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not remember, but I can look at the hearings.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. If the gentleman does not know, I do not know; and consequently I do not feel that it would be fair to this committee to move to strike out $85,000 of their appropriation when perhaps only $50,000 of it was for fire control.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Have you not contended the item was duplicated, and that your committee appropriated $85,000 for this purpose? Certainly, if that is true, we would have enough if you knocked out the $85,000 provided in the Army bill.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman is mistaken. It may be that only $50,000 was by the Committee on Military Affairs deemed necessary for fire control. It may be they thought that $150,000 was necessary for the other subjects covered by this paragraph. Consequently, if I should move to strike out $85,000 from this appropriation it might cripple the Service in other branches. If the gentleman is able to tell me they allowed $85,000 for this purpose, I would cheerfully move to strike that amendment out under the strange circumstances with which we are confronted, but as the gentleman disavows any knowledge of how much is for fire control, and I can not tell how much is to be used for fire control, I do the only thing possible and move that for this year that this language be stricken out, so that the Department shall not be able to double its appropriation for this one subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa will not prevail. He is making a greater bugaboo about this thing than facts justify. The Chief of the Signal Office, in his testimony before the committee, said only for the last ten months had he been engaged in this operation of equipping field batteries with fire control, and my judgment is to equip the batteries we have will not cost over $6,000 at the outside. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the military appropriation bill for 1905 carried under this same item for the Signal Corps that this is included in an appropriation for $208,500, and the bill for 1906, the current fiscal year, is for $208,000, while this bill only carries $200,000, a reduction with this language in over the appropriations for the last six years, when the appropriation did not carry this language under the item for the electrical appropriations for the Army, and it seems to me that it is not necessary, it is unusual, it is not fair for the gentleman, when the point has been decided against him, to come in and try to perfect this bill and strike out language that belongs in the bill and does not increase the appropriations and does not increase the expenses of the Government one dollar. Every dollar we have appropriated for fire control can properly be expended from the $200,000 carried in this bill and the amount appropriated by the Committee on Appropriations can be used on fortifications.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is not available for that.

Mr. HULL. Then they can let it lie in the Treasury.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. They will not, though.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. HULL. Why, certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman state to the House how much of the $200,000 is intended to be used for fire control?

Mr. HULL. Our understanding from the Chief of the Signal Corps was that it was not a large expenditure, and that we need not increase the amount of $200,000 asked for in the original estimate.

Mr. TAWNEY. But that does not answer my question.

Mr. HULL. He did not state the specific amount.

Mr. TAWNEY. And you appropriated without reference to the amount to be used for fire control?

Mr. HULL. We did not ask how much. If you have a battery at an infantry or cavalry post, they can not practice shooting. It can only be done when they are out on large reservations and several batteries in action. There is one large reservation at Niobrara and one down in Oklahoma where a regiment of field artillery can be in practice and where fire control is necessary. It is impossible at a general post throughout the country for the batteries to be practiced in target shooting, because the land is not sufficient for them, but I do protest against trying to strike this language out at this time, when it does not increase or reduce the appropriation. It leaves it exactly as it is. It settles the fact of the committee's jurisdiction, and I trust that the genial gentleman from my State and the genial gentleman from Minnesota, at the head of the Committee on Appropriations, will in the future recognize the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs in the little unimportant things that we are still trying to hold. [Applause.] I hope that the motion will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, lines 1 and 2, strike but the words "fire control and direction apparatus and material for field artillery."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TAWNEY) there were—ayes 38, noes 62.

Mr. HEFLIN. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were refused, not a sufficient number arising in support thereof.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, in order to test the question again on the Alaskan cable and to clear my skirts of any blame for failure, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, For such extensions of the Alaskan military cable and telegraph system as may be approved by the President as a military necessity, $125,000, to be paid out of amounts heretofore and hereafter received and paid into the Treasury for commercial service over said cable system, the extent of such extension and the cost thereof to be reported to Congress by the Secretary of War.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against that. It is the same as the last provision, except a limitation upon the amount.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I do not regard Alaska as on the same plane as other Territories on account of the great expense of communication with different parts of the territory. There is, as I understand it, some 70 or 80 miles of cable or telegraph that should be built in order to connect some of the principal ports of Alaska with a military cable system. At this time, as I understand it—that is the information before the committee—they are compelled to send to the Canadian line in order to make this connection. It is not very far to the Canadian line, but the time might come when it would not be convenient or proper, or we might not have the right to use that; and if that time should come it will be a very serious embarrassment to many of the people of the territory and might be so to the people of the United States.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why is this appropriation made out of receipts from this line? If this line is to be extended, why not appropriate the money outright for that purpose?

Mr. HULL. This keeps track of the receipts, which I understand was the main objection to the other method of appropriation. By the other way there might be $200,000 paid in and $200,000 to be paid out and nobody would know anything about the amount. My idea is to have a specific appropriation of $125,000. I desire to say this is the provision that the gentleman from New York, the senior member of the minority on the Military Affairs Committee, has given more attention to than all the rest of us put together, and he was to have been here to make a full explanation. I have not charged myself with it very seriously. It is a matter of indifference to me.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to ask the gentleman this: Does not the gentleman from Iowa believe if this cable or telegraphic system should be extended he should offer an amendment that is clearly in order appropriating directly the money for that purpose, without entangling it with this provision to take receipts?

Mr. HULL. In my judgment it would not be in order to give the President the right to determine what is military and what is not. We ourselves have determined that heretofore, and when we get it into his hands to determine, in my judgment it will be subject to a point of order because of a change in the method of appropriation. I want to say, further than that, that in my judgment any appropriation that does not specify the line or points to be connected is subject to a point of order. I will not state that this is not subject to a point of order. I am only arguing on the broader ground. I believe it is beneficial to the Government in some sense, and that, situated as they are in Alaska, they can not carry on these great works without some help from the Government.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts rose.

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. I just wanted to ask the gentleman if the receipts paid into the Treasury should happen to fall below the $125,000 that would cut off the appropriation, would it not?

Mr. HULL. To that extent; yes.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Is that a desirable thing to do?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN] that it says "heretofore" and "hereafter." Now, during the last fiscal year there was paid into the Treasury from this service, $74,000, and it is the judgment of General Greely, the head of the Signal Corps until lately, that the receipts from that cable will amount in the next year or the present or current fiscal year, to somewhere in the neighborhood of some $200,000. And those receipts are entirely independent of charges that are made for Government messages. There is no charge for Government messages. The Government business is transmitted over the cable lines without any charge whatever. These are the commercial receipts that have been turned into the Treasury for the last fiscal year, and the estimated receipts for the current fiscal year.

And, I will say further, that the Canadian government has extended its cable to Port Simpson. The projected cable will extend from Ketchikan to Juneau, connecting at Juneau with the whole system. Ketchikan is the first American port that a ship touches in going into Alaska and the last port it touches coming back from Alaska; and this cable is considered very necessary. Our custom officers are there, and it is considered very necessary that the cable system should be extended.

I will say the only reason for providing expressly for this money to be paid out of the receipts for commercial business over this line, is to indicate that it is not to be a charge upon the Treasury, but that the service itself will pay for its extension. That is the only object.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I only want to bring before the House for a moment an imagination of the condition of things in Alaska. Every now and then there is a new camp; every now and then there is a rush to new gold fields; there are thousands of people in heretofore unknown places, without organization, without much government, and generally there has to be a force sent there to see to order and to make arrangements such as the Government does make, and communications are often as much a question of life and death with these people as in the case where the Government sends a rescuing expedition for whalers.

Mr. LACEY. Does the gentleman remember that the Speaker of this House brought in a special provision for reindeer to reach these Alaskan people that were away off from the line of travel?

Mr. PARKER. I do.

Now, you can not say when all these conditions will be ended. It is certain that General Greely, this man who is at the head of telegraph communications in Alaska, has made a wonderful success, and has not merely organized a system which is perfectly wonderful in its operations in this new country, but one that, instead of being a nonpaying institution, has increased in its receipts so that last year it paid $72,000, and this year it pays $150,000, and next year it will pay over $200,000 of receipts.

He only put these lines where they were needed. Hardly one of them—there have been some—but hardly one of them have been arranged by Congress or defined by Congress. The lines have been established as the needs of the situation of the coming year required. The Government regarded this as necessary in the battle with ice and snow, and for the comfort of the people that went into these summer camps in unknown countries. The Government has regarded it as almost analogous to a time of war—a war against the elements, if nothing else—and what it has done in this direction I think has been wise.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Under whose direction was this done?

Mr. PARKER. Under the direction of the Chief Signal Officer. I think this provision is subject to the point of order, but I think no point of order ought to be made against it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not think this appropriation should be made, because it is not a military matter, and if the House orders this money expended for the purpose suggested it will be deliberately constructing a commercial line for the accommodation of business.

Mr. TAWNEY. We bought some coal lands in the Philippine Islands last week.

Mr. SLAYDEN. As a military necessity, to take care of the Navy. When this matter was brought before the committee upon a resolution of a member of the committee General Greely, in very halting and uncertain language, gave it a half-hearted indorsement. He was asked early in that hearing by Mr. HOLLIDAY, a member of the committee, if he had previously made this recommendation. He said:

> It was in my annual report, and it was recommended by the Secretary of War this year.

The chairman asked him:

> Is this for military purposes or for the benefit of the inhabitants of Alaska?

Evasively, the General replied:

> It is a point of strategic importance. In my report I stated that I could not say it was absolutely necessary for military purposes.

Further along Mr. SULZER inquired:

> I understand you recommend this as a military necessity?

And he said:

> I do not recommend it as a military necessity.

And every man that has made an argument before the committee has argued that it was for commercial purposes. All the supporters of the measure that have been before the committee argued it from the point of view of business. General Greely himself stated that the receipts were such in amount that they would perhaps reach a very considerable sum.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. I have a letter here from General Allen. You stated that this thing was exclusively for commercial business.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I did not state that it was exclusively for commercial business.

Mr. TAWNEY. The Government messages transmitted over this cable system during the last year amounted to $71,349.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Over the constructed lines?

Mr. TAWNEY. Over the cable system. That is the extent to which that cable system is being used by the Government today without any charge. We have a customs officer at Ketchikan, the first port that these vessels touch after getting out of Canadian waters going north and the last one coming back until they reach Puget Sound.

From the standpoint of the Government and for commercial reasons it is just as essential that this cable should be extended to Ketchikan as to have it at Juneau.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to say that I am not familiar with the geography of Alaska, not having had the pleasure of visiting the Territory, but I repeat that General Greely said that it was not a military necessity, and that other gentlemen came before the committee to urge it from the point of view of commercial business. If we go into this thing, let us do it frankly and admit that it is merely the construction out of public funds of a telegraph line to accommodate commerce.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I will not say anything on the point of order just now, because I can not see any difference between this amendment and the provision originally in the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. The difference between this provision and the one in the bill is that the receipts for commercial business over this cable system must be paid into the Treasury, and then the expenditures paid out of those receipts, which are kept separate and distinct from the general fund in the Treasury. Under the provision as it was reported by the committee the receipts need not be accounted for, except as they would appear in the extension of the cable.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My objection to this item is this: If that cable in Alaska should be built as a military necessity, the money necessary to build it should be appropriated regardless of the receipts from the cable line from commercial business. This amendment in its present shape is very misleading. It evidently would create the impression that the net receipts of this line would be used in the building of the cable. That is not a fact. It costs about $200,000 to operate the present cables there, and the cost of operation is paid out of the appropriations for the pay of the Army. This $72,000 that is turned into the Treasury is merely a net receipt after settling accounts with the other lines.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. It is the gross receipts. There are no net receipts, because the line does not pay expenses.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is exactly the gross receipts, because they receive $102,000, and $30,000 of that is paid to the other commercial lines having connections with them, through which they transmit messages. That amount is received in addition to the $72,000 covered into the Treasury. There is also a sum for purely Government business, having a certain value. But including the value of the Government business, the gross receipts do not equal the operating expenses of the line, and to say that this extension should be made out of the receipts covered into the Treasury is to give the impression that the commercial business is so extensive that the Government is making a profit, and that out of the profit military lines are being extended, when that is not the fact at all.

Now, if the gentleman from Iowa desires to ask the committee to appropriate some specific sum, regardless of the receipts from the operation of these lines, I would not interpose a point of order against that, but I will insist on the point of order when an amendment is in such a form as to mislead now and to be misleading hereafter to anybody who desires to ascertain the cost of maintaining or extending or operating this line.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist on his point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is clearly subject to the point of order, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from New York. The Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 13365. An act to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the Kensington and Eastern Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Calumet River," approved February 7, 1905;

H. R. 12614. An act to change the name of a portion of T street to California street; and

H. R. 7139. An act legalizing the removal of the county seat of Washita County, Okla.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4394. An act to increase the limit of cost of the post-office and court-house at Evanston, Wyo.;

S. 4130. An act to authorize the Capital City Improvement Company, of Helena, Mont., to construct a dam across the Missouri River;

S. 4128. An act permitting the building of a dam across the Red Lake River at or near the junction of Black River with said Red Lake River in Red Lake County, Minn.;

S. 3294. An act to provide for the erection of a public building at Alton, Ill.;

S. 1878. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon in the city of Provo, State of Utah;

S. 1792. An act to provide for the erection of a public building at Baker City, in the State of Oregon;

S. 1694. An act for the erection of a public building at Carthage, Mo.;

S. 690. An act to authorize the President of the United States to appoint John Gibbon captain and quartermaster in the Army;

S. 580. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Moscow, in the State of Idaho;

S. 398. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Greenville, in the State of Texas;

S. 333. An act in regard to a monumental column to commemorate the battle of Princeton, and appropriating $30,000 therefor;

S. 111. An act to aid in the erection of a monument or memorial at Point Pleasant, W. Va., to commemorate the battle of the Revolution fought at that point between the colonial troops and Indians October 10, 1774; and

S. 38. An act for the erection of a statue to the memory of Gen. James Miller at Peterboro, N. H.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

House concurrent resolution No. 21.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to submit to Congress a report upon the improvement of the so-called flats of the Anacostia River from its mouth to the District line, with recommendations and estimates of cost.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

PAY OF OFFICERS OF THE LINE.

For pay of officers of the line, $5,369,240: Provided, That all commissioned officers of the Army may transfer or assign their pay accounts, when due and payable, under such regulation as the Secretary of War may prescribe: Provided further, That when the office of Lieutenant-General shall become vacant it shall not hereafter be filled, but said office shall cease and determine.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the following language in this bill:

Provided further, That when the office of Lieutenant-General shall become vacant it shall not hereafter be filled, but said office shall cease and determine.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD rose.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to state what my point of order is.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I want to reserve another point of order in time against the first proviso. If that is understood to be reserved that is all I desire.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly. I make the point of order that this proviso changes existing law.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I wish the gentleman from Ohio would withhold his point of order, and that the committee would give me ten minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio reserves his point of order, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] asks unanimous consent to be permitted to speak for ten minutes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. My point of order is also reserved as to the first proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine reserves the point of order against the first proviso.

Mr. HULL. I should like to explain that paragraph.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I am going to ask the gentleman to explain it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to proceed for ten minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I think it is well to inform the Members of this House who have come into Congress since 1900 how the rank of Lieutenant-General came to be created at that time. It was a matter of common notoriety that General Miles, ranking major-general of the line, had been wanting to have his rank increased to Lieutenant-General for some years, and he never could do it. At last General Corbin, brigadier on the staff, and his friends were ambitious to have his rank raised to major-general; and by a coalescence of the friends of the two—coalescence is a polite word to use in that connection—both things were accomplished by one motion. The way it was done was by Senate amendment No. 18 on the Army appropriation bill for 1900. I was opposed to creating the rank of Lieutenant-General in time of peace and I am yet. I was so certain, however, that the House was going to agree to it in the peculiar posture of affairs that, in order to get rid of it as a perpetuity—I cared nothing at all at that time about either General Miles or General Corbin—I offered an amendment confining the Lieutenant-Generalcy to the service of General Miles. There were so many of my party and political friends opposed to my proposition that I ultimately withdrew it, though I believed then and am certain now that I was right.

There are certain compensations which come to a Member of this House, and one of them is to at last see Congress come around to his dissenting opinion. One of the greatest judges that ever sat on the supreme bench of Missouri, Thomas A. Sherwood, was there thirty years, and it is marvelous to take the decisions of that court for those three decades and see how frequently his dissenting opinion in the beginning became the opinion of the court in the end. I will read what I said as to the lieutenant-generalcy in June, 1900, because I can not improve on it now, although it was said on the spur of the moment. Here it is:

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to make any speech about the Lieutenant-Generalship, but I have one very well settled idea about this matter, without any reference whatever to the personality of General Miles or anybody else. I regard him as a good soldier, and what little personal relations I have had with him have been pleasant. I believe that the rank of Lieutenant-General is an extraordinary rank, an office of extraordinary importance, and always is or is always to be intended as an extraordinary honor to some soldier by reason of extraordinary service. I am not undertaking to say whether General Miles is entitled to it or not, but I am opposed to conferring a rank that has never been conferred on any man except George Washington, Winfield Scott, Ulysses S. Grant, William T. Sherman, Philip H. Sheridan, and John M. Schofield upon any man who accidentally, by length of service, however undistinguished, becomes the ranking major-general of the United States Army by seniority—merely that and nothing more.

The history of the Lieutenant-Generalcy in this country is an interesting bit of history. It was first conferred upon General Washington as a special mark of honor, after he had been President, at the time when a war appeared to be brewing with France. He was not only made Lieutenant-General, but as a further evidence of the love and confidence of the people he was given unusual authority of appointing his own major-generals and brigadiers—which he did—a performance unparalleled in our annals. The rank of Lieutenant-General lapsed with him, and was never revived until it was bestowed upon Gen. Winfield Scott many years later.

It lapsed again with him, and was never revived until President Lincoln concluded to place Grant in command of all the Union armies in 1864. Then it was bestowed upon General Sherman and General Sheridan, lapsing with the latter.

After that we had no Lieutenant-General until—during the Fifty-third Congress—the rank was revived for the benefit of Gen. John M. Schofield.

Again it lapsed with his retirement, and we have had no Lieutenant-General since.

The present bill proposes to create the rank of Lieutenant-General in perpetuity, and to that I am unalterably opposed.

Now let us suppose a case. Because we walloped the Spaniards in "jig" time is no reason on earth why, within this generation and in a very few years, we may not have a stupendous war with some power of the first class. Miles will go out in two or three years, as I understand it. Then some major-general, I do not know who and I do not care who, that nobody may think is fit to command the armies of the United States in a time of war, will stand, with the rank of Lieutenant-General, in the pathway of the promotion of the soldiers who distinguish themselves on the field of battle.

The rank of Lieutenant-General is a rank that ought to be held open to confer on the man who wins great military laurels in actual service on the field. There can not be any gainsaying that proposition, and unless you put a limit on it there is some lieutenant in the Army who will begin immediately to use his political influence to-morrow to get himself boosted over his fellows having commissions of the same date as his, in order that he may be the senior captain, major, lieutenant-colonel, colonel, brigadier-general, and major-general, in order to climb to this high rank. I am in favor of restricting it to soldiers of the class who have worn it before, and there it no other sensible view to take of it either.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the situation of this bill in the House proves that I was entirely correct then, because the current of opinion in Congress in favor of abolishing the Lieutenant-Generalcy is so strong that the only way to prevent such action is to raise a point of order against it here now. Those in favor of retaining this extraordinary rank in perpetuity are afraid to submit the question to a vote, but invoke a bare technicality. When the General Staff was created we were assured that it would prove a panacea for all the ills which afflicted the military establishment; but we have come to the pitiful conclusion under this staff arrangement, as I understand it, that a Lieutenant-General or a major-general may have to take his orders from a brigadier-general who happens to be Chief of Staff. To a layman that seems preposterous.

One thing more. Here is an interesting bit of history which I dug up since I made the remarks in 1900. We came very near having a Lieutenant-General during the Mexican war. Politics has always figured in this military business. All parties have sinned more or less in this regard. It so happened that the two most distinguished generals in the Mexican war were Whigs—Gen. Zachary Taylor and Gen. Winfield Scott. The Administration was Democratic. They wanted a Democratic hero to come out of that war, and so they passed a bill through the House—and it only lacked three votes of getting through the Senate—to create the rank of Lieutenant-General; and that immortal Missourian, Col. Thomas Hart Benton, was to be made Lieutenant-General of the Army and be the Democratic hero of that war. He said himself that the reason the bill failed in the Senate was through the jealousy and machinations of James Buchanan, William L. Marcy, and Robert J. Walker, all members of Polk's Cabinet, all Democratic candidates for the Presidency, and who, having no military records themselves, did not want a Democratic hero to come out of that war. [Laughter.] Such a hero might have been in their way.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Very well.

Mr. LACEY. Was not there a great Democratic hero come out of that war—Pierce?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Oh, no. He was a good soldier, but not a great one; not a hero. Let us philosophize a little. If Benton had been made Lieutenant-General, as certain as fate he would have been elected President of the United States in 1848. Surely he would have been reelected in 1852, and a more intense, a more courageous, a more clear-headed Union man never lived on this earth. He was the chief exemplar, apostle, and defender of the Jacksonian school of Democracy; more Jacksonian than St. Andrew himself. If he had been elected President in 1848 and 1852, there never would have been any Kansas question to vex the minds of the American people, and in all human probability he would have postponed—perhaps would have prevented—the great civil war, which cursed and desolated the land.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like five minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The human mind is past finding out. There have been three most conspicuous Americans, none of whom ever rose above the rank of colonel, who distinguished themselves in the field of politics or in practice at the bar, or in both. All three are great historical figures, and they lived and died in the belief, notwithstanding their triumphs at the bar, in politics, and in statesmanship, that their true vocation was war, and that they were great military geniuses—Aaron Burr, James Monroe, and Thomas H. Benton. President Roosevelt in his Life of Benton gives us a very interesting book in many respects. By the way, I may say, in passing, that Benton is the only United States Senator whose biography has been written by a President, and he is one of the very few that ever deserved such an honor. Colonel Roosevelt wrote that Life of Benton a good long time ago, and in that book he makes fun of Benton for wanting to be a Lieutenant-General. The fact on which Benton claimed he ought to be made a Lieutenant-General was that his commission as colonel of volunteers and lieutenant-colonel in the Regular Army antedated the commission of General Taylor, General Scott, or any of the rest of those generals. President Roosevelt ridicules that proposition. Now, Mr. Chairman, in the light of the military history of the United States since the beginning of the Spanish war I do not think that anybody has any right to make fun of Col. Thomas H. Benton for preferring such an argument as that. [Laughter and applause.]

The other day my friend, the gentleman from Ohio, General KEIFER, made a speech. He served as a major-general in two wars and knows something about military affairs, which I do not claim to know anything about. There are two or three sentences out of his speech which I will read as containing the essence of common sense, and therefore, I suppose, of military sense. I want to add, by the way, that we never had the rank of General but once. It was conferred on Grant; then on Sherman, and lapsed with him. Then, when Sheridan was on his deathbed, Congress very generously revived the rank for him. Here is what General KEIFER says:

> It was the policy in the Confederate States to have a general to command each army, to have a lieutenant-general for every corps of the army, the general to command every separate army in the field consisting of more than one corps, a major-general for every division of the army, and a brigadier-general for every brigade in the army. That worked out its perfection; and I believe that our Army, now organized as it is, small as it is, must always be, to be in perfect order and its whole machinery in readiness to meet any emergency, ought to have a commanding officer. I do not believe in the plan of a staff running the Army, either in peace or war.
> If we had a war of any magnitude it would disappear, as it ought to, over the first night. You can not command an army by means of a staff located in a room heated with hot air or steam or hot water. An army is not commanded in that way; and if we had a war we should be compelled to have commanders in the field in close touch with their troops, and who were not under the control of a staff, no matter how good or how great it was.

In a time of war that is precisely the organization we ought to have, but if we go on with these Lieutenant-Generals succeeding each other in rapid succession and disappearing suddenly, like these new-fangled guns that we have—and that is the way it has been during the last five or six years—when the tug of war comes we will be compelled to create the extraordinary rank of general in order to get somebody to command the Lieutenant-Generals. [Laughter.] In less than six years we have had four Lieutenant-Generals—Nelson A. Miles, S. M. B. Young, Adna R. Chaffee, and John C. Bates. General Bates was born in St. Charles County, in my district. He is the son of Edward Bates, Lincoln's first Attorney-General, and a nephew of Frederick Bates, the second governor of the State of Missouri. General Bates is a good soldier. So were the other Lieutenant-Generals. So are Generals Corbin and MacArthur. But, nevertheless, it is unwise to continue to confer the high rank of Lieutenant-General upon the ranking major-general. Therefore, if the point of order is sustained, I say that as soon as we can do it this extraordinary rank of Lieutenant-General ought to be abolished until we have a war, and then we should save the ranks of Lieutenant-General and of full General to confer on such men as Lee, Jackson, Grant, Thomas, Sherman, Sheridan, and soldiers of high and approved capacity to take command of great armies. That is all I have to say about it. I am more convinced now than I was in 1900 that we have no use for a Lieutenant-General in the United States in time of peace. [Applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I have no controversy with the gentleman from Missouri as to the fitness or propriety or nonpropriety of maintaining this rank of Lieutenant-General as a permanent officer of the Army in time of peace. I wish to say to the committee that my sole purpose in making this point of order is to prevent what I believe to be a great wrong, and I might say outrage, against the two soldiers who have already been designated to become Lieutenant-Generals at certain fixed times already rapidly approaching, and if this point of order is sustained, as of course it will be, I shall ask unanimous consent to put a provision in the bill providing for the abolishment on a given day of the rank of Lieutenant-General, this to take effect at a date after the promotion of both Corbin and MacArthur. I differ with the gentleman in one respect. Great merit in war, great merit in the estimation of a great country's great appreciation by generous people does not always and necessarily come from the command of soldiers in the field. I know that the public eye is directed to achievements on the fighting or firing line, and yet I do know from my study of history that men are raised to the greatest military distinction without even, at the time when they earned that great distinction, having been commanders of fighting soldiers in the field. I think likely that the historian of the future will write that the war that opened the eyes of the world to the possibility of the highest military greatness, up to that time at least, was the Franco-Prussian war, and I believe that out of the smoke of that great conflict emerged the one great figure that drew to himself from the intelligent men of the world who wrote about it and studied it the greatest commendation that any man received from that great conflict, and that was the man who did not command a soldier in the field of that great war, Von Moltke, who has gone down in German history as the greatest military strategist and the greatest military genius that his day and generation produced.

It is the genius of war that plans campaigns and wins campaigns. It is the genius of the military mind that makes achievement possible. It is strategy and administrative excellence. It is not necessary to cite particular instances. The soldier, the company, the regiment, the brigade, the division, the corps, the army move by the inspiration of the genius and strategy of organization. The soldier in the field is there to obey orders and fight, to pursue the plans already made and marked out for him. The strategist plants the campaign and the organizer of the army furnishes the men and the material. France was overwhelmed by Germany in large part because of her defective organization. The disasters to France did not come so much at Metz and Strasburg and the great battles of the Franco-German war as they came in the war department at Paris. It was the defective organization, the corrupt commissariat, the imperfect quartermaster's department, while behind the German organization stood the great board of strategy, the great leaders of organization, and the great chieftain who directed and organized the movement.

Coming now to our own time here, I oppose the abolition of this rank at this time, because it will look to all the world as though it were done on purpose to prevent the just conferring of the rank of Lieutenant-General upon the two gentlemen whom I named in my remarks the other day. Both of them have been designated. General Corbin, about to arrive upon our shores within the next three or four days, will be a Lieutenant-General for a short time, which, I think, will extend from some time in April to some time in September. I am not going to disparage the officers who commanded troops at Santiago. They never have had just credit for it, and I am not going to disparage the men who assaulted San Juan Hill and startled the world by their gallantry. It was a gallant and splendid epoch in a war for humanity and justice, but behind it all was the man who, in the Adjutant-General's Office, with a crippled army, a deficient Quartermaster's Department, a deficiency all along the line and of everything pertaining to the war, aided as no one man did nor any two men did the ultimate achievement that saved us from military disrepute in the eyes of the world and put us on the magnificent footing that we had on the 12th day of August of that year.

I do not suggest that our War Department was not in efficient and competent hands. General Alger was a tried soldier of the civil war, an upright, faithful, and efficient citizen in time of peace, and brought to the discharge of the high duties of his great position splendid purpose, pure motives, and efficient administration; but it was the organizing of the forces in the Adjutant-General's office that took the crude and imperfect material of an army and molded and fashioned and shaped them into the organization that astonished mankind.

I know, and hundreds know, what was said at the time. The men—officers, soldiers, and sailors—won renown in the short war with Spain, and undying glory attaches itself to the name of George Dewey. I can never speak of the Spanish war without a word of commendation for my old companion in arms, General Shafter. No matter what envious tongues may utter, he was a strong type of a blunt, brave, untiring soldier. Poetry, art, and literature have joined in immortalizing the famous charge at San Juan, and the American people, whose verdict is never defective in the long run, have testified their appreciation of an achievement that consisted of the organization of a regiment and a gallant and magnificent assault upon the position of an enemy; but behind that assault and reaching all the way to the campaign and instruction and organization in the United States was being developed the genius of a tried, experienced, capable, gallant soldier, Henry Clarke Corbin, and while I will join with all mankind in the praise of Dewey, of Sampson, of Schley, I will not forget the man who made all these things possible by his genius of organization and his great knowledge of the details of army necessities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will ask for five minutes more, and I will promise to ask no more time than that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed five minutes longer. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I know nothing about—oh, I have some suspicions, but I know nothing, in fact, about—how the office of Lieutenant-General happened to be created at the time suggested by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], nor do I know aught of combinations that might have been formed. I know very well there were those of the House of Representatives who talked to me about it that unless the two of them should be put together they would not, either one of them perhaps, have been successful. But the office of Lieutenant-General was then created, and it has been bestowed, as I showed the other day, and as I repeat and insist, worthily ever since. There is no disparagement upon the character of the achievement and worth and merit of Chaffee as an American soldier, nor was there upon Young, nor is there upon Bates now.

Now, those men having come forth from the history of the Spanish war, and MacArthur and Corbin having been designated for the place that has been indicated, it would be a direct thrust upon those men to take from them and out from under them the office of Lieutenant-General. To do it now would be equal to, and understood to be, a vote of censure by Congress. I am perfectly willing to offer an amendment, and I have it drawn here ready to offer, to terminate this office of Lieutenant-General on the 1st day of January next, and I agree with the distinguished gentleman from Missouri in all that he has said except the military genius of Mr. Benton, which I do not know anything about, and I take his word for that even; I agree with him in all that he has said that the office of Lieutenant-General and office of General ought to be kept for the purposes that he has indicated and have them ready when the time shall come, so that in the hour of necessity military genius can be rewarded and placed in a position to make it valuable. Just how we are going to ascertain it is a question that I leave to others to decide. We began the civil war without knowing very much about what was going to happen, and there came from the low ranks of the whole Army, from practical obscurity, the men who ultimately achieved greatness, and they were complimented and honored by the power that was conferred upon them. I have no objection to that proposition, but I am not willing at this time, under these peculiar circumstances, that this bill shall pass in the form that it is now.

It is unnecessary, in the interest of economy or in the interest of carrying out the theory of the Military Committee, that this blow should be delivered against the honor and integrity of these two men. Let the act take effect in the future and I will not object. Let the act be so drawn as to protect promotions made during the current year. That will cover the cases of Corbin and MacArthur. Then I will be content and the people of the country will be content, and the result aimed at by the Military Committee will be substantially reached without the wrong and injustice that will necessarily flow from an act such as this.

Mr. Chairman, in compliance with the authority given me to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon this topic, I desire to say that I most sincerely regret that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] should have made the speech which he did make following my remarks upon this question. Nothing that he can say, however, will provoke me, no matter how I may regret his attitude, to criticise him or his career. He too was a soldier and was one of the men behind the guns. He doubtless did not receive that recognition and promotion that I know he most certainly deserved. I am not speaking of official reports nor the record of promotions, but I am speaking of my personal knowledge and personal observation when I say that he acted well his part and deserves well to-day of his country, but I regret and I hope he regrets that in the excitement of debate and in order to decorate more fully his always splendid rhetoric he should have given utterance to the language he did. There is little enough, Mr. Chairman, of recognition being given nowadays to the services of the men who served in the civil war, and the strong suggestion comes to us, as we are approaching the end, that we be careful of what we say and do and how we act in relation to our comrades of the civil war. And, therefore, it is, I deeply regret, that the gentleman should have given utterance to an interrogatory that went on the wings of the Associated Press and made its appearance in nearly all newspapers of the United States, and that interrogatory was this: "Who is this man Corbin?" It is true, and I congratulate the gentleman upon it, that in the expurgated speech this appears: "Who is this man? What was his record?" And then the following: "The record ought to be greater than the office, and great deeds should shed luster upon the office rather than the office should shed luster upon the man." A man makes a record according to his opportunity. A man who led a small detachment of a regiment into the death trap of San Juan is just as much entitled to praise and glory and honor for that deed as though he had commanded an army of 100,000 men. According to the philosophy of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER], there is no avenue open for recognition unless by the accident of organization the soldier becomes commander of great bodies of men in great battles. Funston swam a river and captured a petty insurrecto, petty in every way, but it was the deed of a gallant soldier, and he was promoted to brigadier-general, and stands in the line for promotion to the head of the Army. Leonard Wood was colonel of the Rough Riders, without experience in military affairs. He did not command the charge of that brilliant regiment, and, so far as I know, until he went to the Philippine Islands, the affair at Santiago covered his military history, but he distinguished himself in Cuba. He made a proud record for himself in the Philippines, and his promotion has followed, with the approval of two Presidents and the Senate.

The proposition of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] belittles the pride and glory of a private soldier, a line officer, a field officer, a regimental commander. What is he? What is his record? Who is this man? Nothing but a regimental commander. He never commanded a great campaign. Surely not! Surely not! Mr. Chairman, the true test of soldierly qualities can be summarized in these words: Unfaltering faithfulness to the duty assigned to him, intelligent obedience of orders of his superiors, the meeting of every emergency thrust upon him with unfaltering and unfailing skill and efficiency, and when that is the record of the man the question of whether he is a lieutenant, a captain, a colonel, a brigadier or a major-general enters not into the estimate. I am not willing to stand by and hear it announced that in order that a soldier shall be entitled to the highest mete of praise he shall have commanded armies in battle. The patient endurance, the intelligent study, the faithful administration of duty is as necessary in time of peace to the development of the real soldier as is the leading of battles and army corps in time of war.

But "who is this man Corbin?" I am going to enlighten my distinguished friend. I want him to know. I want him to know, so that never again, never again will he ask that question.

First, I print here as a part of my remarks the circular statement of the War Department under date of July 15, 1902, and then I add—and some of it is repetition—a fuller official record of Henry Clarke Corbin, as furnished to me on the 3d of March, 1906, by the Military Secretary:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, July 15, 1902.

STATEMENT OF THE MILITARY SERVICE OF MAJ. GEN. HENRY C. CORBIN, ADJUTANT-GENERAL, UNITED STATES ARMY.

VOLUNTEER SERVICE.

General Corbin, a native of Ohio (born September, 15, 1842), entered the volunteer service of the United States during the war of the rebellion as a second lieutenant in the Eighty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry, July 28, 1862, but before the organization was completed he was assigned to the Seventy-ninth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, serving therein as second and first lieutenant, respectively, until November 14, 1863, when he was appointed a major of the Fourteenth United States Colored Infantry. In the following year (March 4, 1864) he was promoted to lieutenant-colonel, and September 23, 1865, made colonel of the Fourteenth United States Colored Infantry. He was honorably discharged from the volunteer service March 26, 1866, with the brevet of brigadier-general, which honorary rank was bestowed upon him in recognition of meritorious services ten days prior to muster out. During the service General Corbin was with his company of the Seventy-ninth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, in the army of the Ohio, from date of entry into the service until the 30th of November, 1862; when he was transferred to Company K of that regiment then attached to the Army of the Cumberland, joining at Murfreesboro, Tenn. He served in the field until November, 1863, when, having been appointed a major of colored troops, he joined his new regiment at Gallatin, Tenn. Upon completion of its organization, the regiment was attached to General Steadman's reserve division of the Fourteenth Army Corps (commanded by Maj. Gen. George H. Thomas), and participated in the campaigns incident to the operations in eastern Tennessee and Georgia until 1864, when the Confederate General Hood assumed the aggressive and made an active campaign against General Thomas's army. In this campaign General Corbin (then lieutenant-colonel) was engaged in action with his regiment at Pulaski, Tenn., and in numerous affairs during the movement of General Steadman's division from Decatur to Huntsville, and thence to Murfreesboro and to Nashville, Tenn. At the opening of the battle of Nashville, General Corbin, then in command of his regiment, lead in the advance and was heavily engaged the 14th, 15th, and 16th of December, and followed in the pursuit of General Hood's army from Nashville until it was captured and dispersed in Tennessee and Alabama.

For "gallant and meritorious services at Decatur, Ala.," the brevet of major was conferred, and for "gallant and meritorious services at the battle of Nashville, Tenn.," he received a brevet of lieutenant-colonel.

REGULAR ARMY SERVICE.

In 1866, upon the muster out of the Volunteer Army, and upon the recommendation of his military commanders, he was commissioned (May 11, 1866) a second lieutenant in the Regular Army. He was appointed to a captaincy of the line December 31, 1866, and from that year to 1876 he was continually in command of his company on the western frontier in campaigns against hostile Indians.

He was appointed to the Adjutant-General's Department June 16, 1880, and served therein nine years in the grade of major, seven years in the grade of lieutenant-colonel, and two years in the grade of colonel, and was, when appointed brigadier-general and adjutant-general of the Army (February 25, 1898), the senior in the corps, having served on the staffs of Generals Hunt, Schofield, Terry, Crook, Miles (with whom he participated in the Sioux Indian campaign), McCook, Ruger, Merritt, and in 1891 conducted a successful campaign against the Moqui Indians in Arizona Territory.

During the Spanish-American war General Corbin was brought into close relations with the President, and was by him consulted upon all questions of policy relating to military affairs; and, in addition to his duties as Adjutant-General of the Army, superintended the organization of 250,000 soldiers; within six months the muster out of 100,000, and subsequently 35,000 additional volunteer forces were mustered, equipped, and made effective for the Philippine service, and they, in turn, disbanded—the Regular Army having been increased during this period to three-fold its former strength.

In recognition of his services, and of the part which he took in the war, the Congress of the United States conferred upon him the rank of Major-General in the Army of the United States.

(at Point Isabel, Tex., August 18 to October 7, 1875), to February 14, 1876; at Washington, D. C., as witness before House committee on Texas border troubles to April 11, 1876. With his company at Fort Ringgold, Tex., to September 9, 1876; on duty at Columbus Barracks, Ohio, October 5 to 19, 1876; commanding detachment and post of Aiken, S. C., October 24, 1876, to January 11, 1877; on duty at Columbus Barracks, Ohio, to March 1, 1877; on leave to March 9, 1877; on duty with President Hayes at Executive Mansion to May 25, 1877. Awaiting orders to September 6, 1877; secretary of the Sitting Bull Commission, going north as far as Fort McLeod, Northwestern Territory, to November 24, 1877. Witness before House Military Committee to December, 1877; on recruiting service in Washington, D. C., to June 18, 1880. On duty as Assistant Adjutant-General in Adjutant-General's Office to September 1, 1882, during which time he accompanied the late President Garfield to Elberon, N. J., in September, 1881; as special aid to General Hancock, acting master of ceremonies and secretary of the Yorktown Centennial Commission, in October, 1881. At Newport Barracks, Ky., as Assistant Adjutant-General, Department of the South, September 4, 1882, to November 1, 1883; at Chicago, Ill., as assistant adjutant-general, Division of the Missouri, November 20, 1883 (being absent in the field with General Miles in Indian Territory July 12 to 26, 1885, and at Pine Ridge Agency, S. Dak., during the Sioux campaign January 4 to 22, 1891), to March 7, 1891; at Los Angeles, Cal., as assistant adjutant-general, Department of Arizona (in the field in connection with the disturbances at the Moqui Indian villages, June 28 to July 9, 1891), to December 2, 1892; at Washington, D. C., as assistant in the Adjutant-General's Office from December 8, 1892, and as principal assistant November 6, 1893, to October 15, 1895, and recorder of the Military Prison Board October 14, 1893, to July 1, 1895; adjutant-general, Department of the East, October 16, 1895, to September 22, 1897, and on duty in the Office of the Adjutant-General, as principal assistant, September 23, 1897, to February 25, 1898, and in charge of Adjutant-General's Office to August 15, 1903. He was on special duty, under instructions of the Secretary of War, in the Philippine Islands June 20 to September 5, 1901, and on duty witnessing the maneuvers of the German army August to September, 1902; on duty with the General Staff at Washington, D. C., August 15 to October 25, 1903; commanding Department of the East October 26, 1903, to January 15, 1904, and the Atlantic Division to October 1, 1904; commanding Division of the Philippines November 11, 1904, to February 1, 1906, being on leave October 7 to December 24, 1905, and since February 1, 1906, en route to the United States.

F. C. AINSWORTH,
The Military Secretary.

Now, if my friend from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] will listen to me, I will point out to him something of "who is this man Corbin." He was the son of a farmer living in Clermont County, Ohio, and before he was 20 years of age he entered the Army as a second lieutenant. He served in the volunteer service until the 26th day of March, 1866. He was brevetted from his rank of colonel, which he had attained, by President Johnson for meritorious services throughout the war. He had risen steadily, first in the white troops and ultimately as colonel of colored troops, and during that period he fought at Pulaski, Tenn.; Dalton, Ga.; Decatur, Ala., and in the battle of Nashville, and was in hot pursuit of General Hood's army, during which he was engaged in several minor engagements. He drove the rebel guerrilla Hughes out of the Sequatchie Valley, and closed his services with the acclaim of the War Department and the encomiums of the people.

His restless spirit and his soldierly instinct suggested to him the Regular Army as a field of operation for life, and he entered it as a second lieutenant in 1866, in the Seventeenth Infantry. He went straight forward, taking the promotions as they came, except that on one memorable occasion, it is within my own personal knowledge, he waved aside an offer of promotion in the Adjutant-General's Department in favor of a disabled officer who would probably have been passed over in Corbin's interests had he not protested against it. He reached the grade of brigadier-general by successive promotions on the 25th of February, 1898, just before the Spanish war began, but he was brevetted major in 1867 for gallant and meritorious services in the battle at Decatur, Ala., and again lieutenant-colonel for gallant and meritorious services in the battle of Nashville, Tenn. These brevets were given upon the recommendation of George H. Thomas. I know another soldier whose greatest pride to-day of all his achievments in military and civil life of which he is proud—the one to which his mind recurs in hours of depression, amid the assaults of his enemies—is the fact that George H. Thomas recommended him for his services performed side by side with Corbin to receive two brevets, one from lientenant-colonel to colonel and one from colonel to brigadier-general. That officer did not command armies in the field. That officer was honored by General Thomas, who never made a mistake, and it was General Thomas who recommended that for gallant and meritorious services in battle Henry Clarke Corbin be twice promoted to grades above the grade where he was found.

We next find him in the Regular Army and the war over. The war has ceased and he is only a second lieutenant. Read his service, furnished officially by the War Department, and I think none of us will wonder that he went up from lieutenant to captain, from captain to major, major to lieutenant-colonel, lieutenant-colonel to colonel, colonel to brigadier-general, and then by the act of Congress practically he was promoted to major-general. He seems to me, as I study his record, to have been hunting for a chance to command in the field, but the chance did not offer, except as he fought the Indians, until there came the Spanish war, and then Corbin's duty was not to command soldiers in the field, not to be seeking for the glory of fighting, but to accept, with regret doubtless, the discharge of the duty he owed to the President and to the country in his great devotion and great fitness for the office which he held, and so he remained at the head of the General Staff until October 25, 1903, and then by direction of the President, in obedience to the order of his superior, he took command of the Department of the East until the 15th of January, 1904, and he took command of the Atlantic Division until October 1, 1904. During that time he stood in the presence of the great soldiers of the world and won the commendation of the men whom he met while witnessing the maneuvers of the armies of foreign countries. His soldierly bearing was commented upon in the official reports of those officers, and then, without a word of complaint, in full accord with the wishes of the President and of the Secretary of War, he went to the Philippine Islands, and from November 11, 1904, to February 1, 1906, commanded that most important of all the divisons of the Army of the United States. In the discharge of that duty I am not trespassing upon propriety when I say that he succeeded best of them all in the trying position of military commander in the Philippines. I do not criticise one of them, but, in the language of one of the highest officers in the Government, General Corbin knew best of all how to command the military in absolute harmony, in perfect accord, and in patriotic deference to the civil authorities under our dual government of the Philippines.

Mr. Chairman, the office of Lieutenant-General will be worthily bestowed upon Henry Clarke Corbin. It will be an incentive to the young soldiers of the United States to recognize that it is not indispensably necessary that West Point shall put her sign manual to the commission of a soldier to be successful; that he may rise outside the prestige of an academic education there and be recognized for his personal achievements in war and in peace, his soldierly qualities being developed by experience and faithful devotion to duty. I draw no invidious comparisons. I glory in the record of my comrades of the civil war, and, Mr. Chairman, I glory in the achievements and development and growth and military fitness and greatness of the men who fought against us. It was an American achievement. Lee and Jackson and Forrest and Hood and Longstreet and all their followers downward to the southern soldier, who fought barefooted and hungry, starving and naked, for a cause as unworthy as it was possible for a cause to be, and yet a cause that commended itself to his conscience. I am proud of their achievements, for their achievements were those of the American soldier, and during the few years left to me I shall never be found, I trust, minimizing by any process of word or act the fame and merit of a distinguished soldier on the Union side of the civil war.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I would like the indulgence of the House for five minutes. I hope that this provision will not be stricken out. I am sorry the gentleman from Ohio in his zeal for one whom he would like to see raised to the grade of Lieutenant-General finds in him a comparison with Von Moltke. Von Moltke was the master genius of a great war. He originated and directed in their operation the plans by which that war was fought. He was the man not "behind the gun" but behind the generals.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not, in cold blood, misrepresent anything I have said.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I do not wish to misrepresent the gentleman at all.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have made no comparison between General Corbin and anybody else. I stand for him as a splendid specimen of the American soldier, and I have not compared him with anybody. I simply pointed out to my friends on the other side that it was not necessary for a man to be present on the field of battle to confer marked honor, and I cited Von Moltke as a specimen.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. And the natural inference——

Mr. GROSVENOR. The inference of the gentleman is an unfriendly inference.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. If I am mistaken, I am sorry. But, who is this man? The highest rank he attained in war was that of lieutenant-colonel. He commanded a regiment. He never originated a campaign; he never executed a campaign. He never commanded an army in battle. Practically speaking, he knows nothing about war, except as the commander of a regiment. This is nothing against him. It is not saying that he would not have been under other circumstances a great commander; but he was not, and that ought to settle this question.

Who are the men that we have made Generals and Lieutenant-Generals? One was Grant, the great chieftain of our armies, who originated and executed the campaigns with which his name is identified. I believe with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] that we ought to draw the line on great deeds and not on the process of elimination by death or promotion, in giving this higher crown of the American people to her military chieftains. It is no reflection upon General Corbin, it is no reflection upon General MacArthur. General Corbin has been substantially a bureau officer for years, and not a general commanding armies. If I had had my way, I never would have had a Miles, a creditable division commander only, to wear the shoes of Washington, and Grant, and Sherman, and Sheridan. Nor would I have Schofield, nor any of these men, do so. There is naught against them personally, but simply because theirs were not records worthy of such exalted rank.

Now, if you confer this upon Corbin and upon MacArthur, why not take in General Greely, Why not continue down the line. When these two men have been promoted and retired, some advocate of some other major-general will rise here and say that he ought to be made a lieutenant-general. It will be regarded as a reflection upon him by his friends and by the country if he is not made a lieutenant-general; and so on to the end.

I am in entire accord with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] in thinking that it was a great misfortune that Thomas H. Benton was not made a Lieutenant-General, if the gentleman's contention is right, for then we would have had no war between the States and none of these troublesome questions now. But there may come a war. Then what? We want the best military genius that the American Army can produce to ride at the head of that Army and direct it, and not a man made simply by choice of preference or favor by the Congress of the United States. Let him win his spurs where every great general who has worthily borne that title has won them, on the field of battle and by the demonstration of his superior ability over others of like rank.

I hope the proviso will prevail, if not to-day then by a provision in some other form, and that we will cease to minimize this great office by filling it with men of whom it is asked, "Who was this man? What was his record?" The record ought to be greater than the office, and great deeds should shed lustre upon the office rather than that the office should shed lustre upon the man. [Applause.]

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] if he desires to follow.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not understand what the gentleman from Iowa desires to do.

Mr. LACEY. I am trying to make some remarks. I addressed the Chair. Does the gentleman want to offer his amendment at this time?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want a ruling upon this point of order, and then want to offer my amendment, and——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that he is prepared to rule on the point of order.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have a moment or two in which to answer the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER], who has just taken his seat.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think the cruelty of that speech answers itself.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I would not desire to take any time if it were not that my silence, after hearing the reference to General Corbin, might be interpreted as something of an acquiescence in what was said with reference to him. General Corbin did not have high rank in the civil war, but he had as high a record of honor in the civil war as any soldier or officer who fought in it. In the Spanish war—and there I knew him well—he was responsible in a large sense, growing out of peculiar conditions at the War Department, for the organization of that splendid army of volunteers that went forth intending to fight that at one time great war power, Spain. He there displayed his great military talent, giving evidence of those qualities rarely found in any man in this country. His organizing power under extraordinary circumstances has never been excelled. The American Army in 1898, when the war with Spain broke out, unlike the Prussian army when the Franco-Prussian war broke out, was wholly unorganized. It had to be literally created so far as the volunteer part of it—much the larger part—was concerned. Officers of the Regular Army had to be assigned, their duties defined, etc. Complete new organizations had to be created, new officers selected, appointed, and assigned. In short, a new army had to be created, and Gen. Henry C. Corbin was the main instrument to do it. He did not belong to the great field generals that we speak of so often and so highly. He was, however, at his post day and night, and certainly members of this body and members of the Senate of the United States who had intercourse with him by day and by night, who consulted him, would bear testimony that he was a great soldier and met a great emergency, and that he won in that war by his genius and effective work honor and credit and a name that should be rewarded by making him a lieutenant-general.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, Mr. Chairman, after——

Mr. HULL. If the Chair will rule on the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has been made against the two provisos to this paragraph. If the gentleman from Ohio insists on the point of order to the second proviso, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment at this time to the bill, which I send to the Clerk to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

I ask unanimous consent to offer, and have agreed to, the following amendment: In line 19, page 5, after the word "prescribed," insert the following: "Provided, further, That when, on or after January 1, 1907, the office of Lieutenant-General shall become vacant it shall not thereafter be filled, but said office shall cease and determine.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, does it require unanimous consent to insert that?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has been raised against it.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Do you ask unanimous consent?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The amendment is just as vulnerable to the point of order as the original proposition.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I make the point of order against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I will reserve it in order that gentlemen may speak about it if they desire to, but I will press it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman reserves the point of order. Unless some gentleman desires to be heard upon the point, the Chair will rule.

Mr. LACEY. I want to speak to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule first on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, against which the gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order.

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman from Pennsylvania reserves his point of order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I said I reserved the point of order, but if there is any doubt about my right to insist upon it, I will do it at this time, and if I may reserve it so that gentlemen may speak, I will reserve it.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, it has been told of Cato that when it was suggested to him that he had no statue in Rome he said that he would rather have the people ask why Cato had no statue than to have it asked why he had one. So with reference to the grade of Lieutenant-General. If we do not modify or repeal this law, after a while it will become a distinction not to have been a lieutenant-general. While the law ought to be repealed at some near date, there are reasons in favor of General MacArthur and General Corbin, and the present occupant of that position, that would make the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] a fair settlement of the controversy. There would then be no civil-war veteran eligible to the place.

In this connection I would like to give just a few figures in addition to those given by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] a few days ago on the question of retirement. He called attention to the fact that there were 245 brigadier-generals who had been placed upon the retired list. That was a startling number. But I want to add, for the information of the House, that out of these 245 every one of them but five served in the civil war more than forty years ago. That civil war had enlisted men and officers to the number of 2,700,000. The aggregate enlistments ran over 3,000,000, but the actual individuals to over 2,700,000 men.

Selected men out of that vast army passed into the regular service, and after this length of time—forty-one years after the war had closed—240 of them are one the retired list as brigadier-generals. Let me also call attention to the fact that 94 of these were put on by act of Congress under the law that gave every officer who is retired and who has served in the civil war in the Army the same right as was allowed some years ago to those who had retired and who had served in the Navy. The law gave them one rank above that in which they had served in the Army, and that provided that it should not exceed that of brigadier-general. So that out of 245, 94 were thus promoted by act of Congress. And it was a just provision.

It is not remarkable that out of this tremendous multitude of men, who fought the battles for the Union more than forty years ago, that 240 of those still have survived and gone upon the retired list as brigadier-generals to pass their declining years on three-quarters pay. Before having themselves retired, they must have served not less than forty years, and before getting the additional rank they must have had service in the Union Army in the war of the rebellion.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I should like to insert in my remarks in this connection, in order that they may go along in the RECORD with those of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE], made the other day, a statement made from the Military Secretary's Office of the War Department. I ask the Clerk to read it in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks that a certain letter be read in his time. The letter will be read in the time of the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE MILITARY SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Washington, February 24, 1906.

Hon. JOHN F. LACEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Referring to your personal inquiry of this date, I have the honor to inform you that on December 1, 1905, the date of the table published on page 2918 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 23, 1906, there were on the retired list of the Army 3 Lieutenant-Generals, 21 major-generals, and 245 brigadier-generals, and that of these all of the Lieutenant-Generals, all of the major-generals except one, and all of the brigadier-generals except five served in the Union Army during the civil war.

Very respectfully,
F. C. AINSWORTH,
The Military Secretary.

MEMORANDUM.—Of the 245 brigadier-generals who were on the retired list of the Army on December 1, 1905, as shown in the table published on page 2918 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 23, 1906, 94 were advanced to the grade of brigadier-general under the provisions of the act of Congress approved April 23, 1904.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, having reserved the point of order on the first proviso, I understand the chairman of the committee would like to make a statement as to the reason why that appears in the bill. I understand that it is new legislation.

Mr. HULL. I should like to have the other point of order decided first. I do not want to confuse the two.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I understood the other was out of the way.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. As far as I am concerned, it is not. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] insists on the point of order to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is no question that the first proviso is subject to a point of order. It is only a question whether it should be made or not. If the gentleman will turn to the hearing before the Military Committee, on page 22, it will be found that the Paymaster-General makes a plea for it on the ground that at this time there is no law providing for such assignments of pay. A man may assign his pay to-day and get his money for it, sell his pay and revoke the assignment to-morrow, and leave the assignee in the lurch. He may make an assignment in San Francisco and then he may go to Manila. He has assigned so much pay to his family each month, and he may revoke that after the first month, so that no one can be paid. The Department desires to have the sanction of law for these assignments if they are to be continued. I understand the Navy has this provision now. A naval officer ordered on a sea voyage may assign his pay for any number of months he desires, and that assignment holds, because it is authorized by law. The Army has not that sanction of law for such assignment.

The object of this, I think, is simply to keep Army officers reasonably honest. I asked the Paymaster-General if they did not court-martial and discharge an officer when it was found that he had assigned his pay and got the money for it and then recalled the assignment? He said yes, when it was found out, but that in a great many cases the man will make little payments along, and the creditor will hope that he will get it all after a while if he does not get the officer turned out of the Army. I believe it is in the interest of good discipline and good administration that when a man assigns his pay and receives value for it he ought to be held to his contract and not permitted to withdraw the assignment. That is all there is in it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I should like to ask the gentleman, does he understand that the operation of that legislation in connection with the Navy is found to be wise and judicious?

Mr. HULL. I am so informed, and should think it would be so.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If that is so, I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman from Maine withdraws the point of order, I desire to reserve it myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama reserves the point of order against the proviso.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will state that I have never believed in legislating on appropriation bills, especially as to legislation that amounts to anything. I think it is a bad form of procedure. And I believe that it would be a dangerous matter to authorize Army officers in the employ of the Government to transfer their pay under any circumstances. Of course I believe a man ought to pay his debts when he contracts them, but it has been recognized for many years, in all departments of the Government, that the salary paid to a governmental officer ought not to be subject to the ordinary processes of the courts for the collection of debts, for governmental and public reasons. It has been recognized as a good, sound policy. Now, if we waive that policy, and allow an Army officer to assign his pay, the first thing we know some officer, under pressure of debt, or under the temptation to borrow money, will assign his pay account to such an extent that he can not stay in the United States Army and live. If we authorize this assignment of pay of their salaries under legislation, why then the money will necessarily in good faith have to be transferred to the creditor.

Mr. PARKER. Does the gentleman understand that this is only after the pay is due that it can be assigned under the bill? There is no assignment beforehand. It is only when due and payable.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, I do not know what is in the mind of the gentlemen who offer the provision, but it says that all commssioned officers of the Army may transfer or assign their pay accounts when due and payable.

Mr. PARKER. When due and payable. I asked the paymaster whether they expected to allow it to be assigned before it was due and payable, and he said the wording of the amendment did not allow it and they did not expect to do it. It was intended for officers who were away from civilization—say, in Alaska—who had no paymaster coming to them for months, and who in this way would be allowed to put an assignment on their pay account and have the money paid to their wives, if it was necessary.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, it is the same proposition according to the gentleman's statement. I think it would be very proper, if it has not already been done, to say that a man may assign his pay to his wife and dependent members of his family.

Mr. PARKER. After it is due is all that they ask; he is not anticipating his pay.

Mr. HULL. I will say frankly to my friend from New Jersey that in my opinion the words "when it is due and payable" only affects the Government. A man going to Manila could make an assignment reaching through several months, as I understand it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is what I was coming to. He may assign his pay months in advance, but the Government does not pay it until it is due and payable. He has made his assignment, the control of his salary has gone out of his hands, and I think it a bad policy for the Government to establish a precedent of that kind. Creditors will then look to the payment of their accounts and they will give credit on the basis that they can collect an officer's salary, and for the good of the Government it is necessary to have that salary there to maintain the officer and his family. It may enable officers to live higher than they ought to, and it may furnish a temptation to live higher than they otherwise would. I do not believe it is wise in this way to change the fixed policy of the Government, and I therefore insist on the point of order. I think it is manifestly new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

PAY OF ENLISTED MEN.

For additional pay for length of service, $1,183,464.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, to what extent this will increase the pay of the Army?

Mr. HULL. My understanding is from the estimates that it will increase the pay about $76,000 a year.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it the judgment of the committee that the results will justify that additional expenditure?

Mr. HULL. I think it will without doubt. I think it is one of the most important provisions we ever incorporated in the bill. In other words, the effective force of the Army is determined by the ability of the men to hit the mark. It is not the number of men or the number of guns, but the number of men that can shoot, and do it effectively, which makes the Army a great destructive machine. Take the early days of the civil war. The men got their guns and went onto the firing line without any experience, and they were simply led to slaughter in many cases. Take the Russo-Japanese war, and the testimony is that the same number of bullets fired by trained marksmen would have utterly destroyed the opposing forces; they did not know how to shoot. We are naturally a nation that understands the use of firearms, but it is rapidly disappearing among our people. Now, if this small sum will add enormously to the efficiency of our Army, no one ought to hesitate to make it. It is not the men that get the additional pay that are alone benefited by this appropriation; every man in the Army is benefited by it because every man will be after it, although very few will get it. But it will raise the efficiency of the Army and benefit every man in the enlisted force.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words about this item which provides additional pay for expert riflemen, sharpshooters, and marksmen.

The regulations, Mr. Chairman, controlling these contests for the various classes of marksmen, sharpshooters, and expert riflemen are made in the War Department—carefully made—with a view of developing the efficiency of the Army and maintaining that standard of efficiency.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, if this additional inducement is offered, is it not likely that the entire Army in the course of two or three years will have qualified as expert marksmen or sharpshooters?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, experience has shown that nothing like the entire Army, indeed but a small percentage of it, will ever qualify as expert riflemen or marksmen.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is the standard so high as to be out of the reach of the ordinary soldier?

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is so high as to be out of the reach of the ordinary soldier. If one will take the pains to read the regulations governing these contests he will be amazed to know the difficulties to be overcome before a soldier can qualify either as a sharpshooter or as an expert rifleman. The shots have to be fired with incredible rapidity and at great distances.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And I suppose if they were all expert marksmen our Army need not be so large.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Unquestionably, and that is one of the reasons I so strongly favor this item. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will proceed with what I was about to say when the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] asked his question.

The provision that hereafter enlisted men who qualify as expert riflemen shall receive, in addition to their pay, $3 per month; those who qualify as sharpshooters, $2 per month, and those who qualify as marksmen, $1 per month, under such regulation as the Secretary of War may prescribe, is, in my judgment, of very great importance.

The prime duty of a soldier in time of war is to shoot, and the more accurately he can shoot the more efficient he is as a soldier. It stands to reason, sir, that an army of 50,000 men, all of whom know how to handle their weapons and to fire with accuracy, are more useful to the country in a crisis than twice that many men would be who are unfamiliar with the use of a gun. The fact that this measure will promote the efficiency of the Army will hardly be denied by anyone. The Secretary of War and officers of the Army, and, indeed, all other people who have to do with the Army, favor some measure which will raise the standard of marksmanship. It is believed by those who have studied the question that the paragraph under discussion if enacted into law will raise it.

In the Army three kinds of rifle experts are recognized. The lowest of these are the marksmen, who are to receive $1 per month additional compensation. The next lowest are the sharpshooters, and, finally, the expert riflemen, who are to receive the $3 per month additional pay.

At present we are allowed by law to pay $1 a month to expert riflemen. The length of time this extra pay is received after qualifying, under present regulations, is three years, provided the expert rifleman continues in the arm of the service using the small arm with which he qualified.

It is most difficult to qualify as an expert rifleman. As an evidence of this, in the entire Army last year there were but 264 officers and men who qualified as such, and of these 80 were commissioned officers and 184 were enlisted men. The amount of $3 per month as a reward for qualification as an expert rifleman is not too much, and it can be assumed that any man who has the ability to shoot sufficiently well will continue year after year to keep himself up to the mark, and will also be of much benefit in teaching others to shoot. During the same year 1,439 sharpshooters qualified—officers and men.

It will no doubt interest the committee to know about how many men out of our Army of 60,000 will probably qualify under this provision of law. A memorandum made for me at the War Department estimates that the average will not exceed fifteen hundred, and the number is more apt to fall short of than to go beyond that figure. That estimate refers to expert riflemen. The number of marksmen who qualified last year was 2,484, officers and men, and the estimate made in asking for the appropriation is based on a maximum of 2,500. Experience leads us to believe that the number will be considerably less.

The benefit to the service from having expert riflemen, sharpshooters, and marksmen in the ranks of the Army is not confined to the actual ability of these men to shoot accurately, but their influence is exerted in a far greater degree in instructing other soldiers of the organization to which they respectively belong in the handling and management of the small arm. The beneficial effect is felt more when they act as instructors in marksmanship to recruits and young soldiers.

The influence of these expert riflemen is moral as well as professional. No man can become or remain an expert shot who does not keep sober. The additional pay and distinction provided for in this bill will be an incentive to sobriety and diligence which is bound to have good effect on the mass of enlisted men. It is a regrettable fact that, despite the abolition of the canteen, which was intended to make total abstainers of the entire Army, soldiers do still sometimes take too much to drink.

Under the privilege granted by the House, I will print here with my remarks an article recently published in the Army and Navy Journal, which was written by Maj. Gen. L. M. Openheimer, of the Texas National Guard. General Chaffee, lately Chief of Staff, and other soldiers of eminence have told me that General Openheimer's letter to the Army and Navy Journal was so clear and practical, and, if its suggestions were followed, would so promote the efficiency of the Army and of all American reserves, that I feel that it ought to be published in the RECORD for the benefit of all who are interested in the question.

THE NATIONAL GUARD AS A RESERVE.

AUSTIN, TEX., December 6, 1905.

To the Editor of the Army and Navy Journal:

Recent issues of your journal and communications from the Army War College show that the experience of the country in the Spanish-American war has impressed our military authorities and all classes with the importance of organizing a military reserve in case of war.

The authors of the communications and our military authorities in general seem to look to the National Guard forces as the sole source of material for such national reserve. I desire to premise my views by stating right here that such criticisms as may be deemed adverse or unjust by my brother officers of the National Guard are not so intended, but solely that their attention may be directed to the weak points of National Guard forces in the essential qualifications necessary for the purposes of a National Guard Reserve, and that these may have due consideration.

Having been connected with the National Guard of Texas for many years (the last five years of my service as its commanding general) and having, in the Spanish war, commanded a Texas volunteer regiment ostensibly composed of National Guard companies, I believe my experience justifies me in laying down the general proposition that the National Guard of the several States can not be depended upon for a practical and efficient reserve, nor can it be made such in the true sense of the term, and this conclusion is predicated upon the following facts:

First. The young men, rank and file, composing National Guard organizations are, with few exceptions, compelled to devote their entire attention to their everyday duties; hence can spare but little time for military purposes.

Second. Their limited time, when they are called out for drill, is devoted entirely to that character of close-order movements which are of little practical value for field purposes.

Third. Should those in authority attempt to instruct this element in the practical work that is of value in the field, this character of service would have the effect of discouraging National Guard enlistments.

Fourth. It matters not what the qualifications of National Guard organizations may be, whether efficient or otherwise, they can not be depended upon to enlist in their entirety in case of war. The regiment I commanded in the last war was composed of companies from our National Guard, and I believe that I do not exaggerate in the least when I assert that not over 20 per cent of its enlisted strength was on the company rosters when said companies were called out, and that this condition applied to a large percentage of all volunteer regiments in said Spanish war throughout the country.

Fifth. The general character of duty imposed upon the enlisted man at our State camps, such as the usual night tour of guard duty, police and fatigue duties, and the exactions of discipline, etc., frequently result in disenchantment and dampen the military ardor of the average enlisted guardsman, hence not more than 25 or 30 per cent attend the next State camp.

Sixth. The limited time, a week or ten days, devoted to such camps can not possibly give any practical results. One day is usually lost in putting the camp in order and getting routine matters in shape, the last day in turning in property and making preparations for leaving camp. Frequently a day or more is lost on account of weather; hence I assume that five days is a full average of the net time devoted to camp work in nine out of ten of our State camps throughout the country.

Seventh. As heretofore stated, the usual routine at State camps is composed mainly of garrison duties, such as parades, reviews, and movements in close order. These, while useful for purposes of military inspiration in time of peace, are practically useless in time of war.

There are, as a general thing, some beautiful ceremonies in State camps, such as parades, reviews, etc., but this sort of thing, in the language of the French officer who witnessed the charge of Balaklava, "It is magnificent, but it is not war."

These several conditions may not be universal, but I believe them to be general. And if they be, what practical good can be accomplished by utilizing this sort of material for military maneuvers? These functions are, or should be, predicated upon the assumption that the forces, rank and file, employed in such maneuvers are proficient not alone in the elementary, but also in the technical acquirements pertaining to the profession of arms. In these functions we have been imitating the maneuvers of European armies, but we lose sight of the fact that the latter, on such occasions, are composed solely of regular troops and such as have served one or more years with the colors, and unless our National Guard has had the latter service, which is not practicable under our form of government, we might as well expect a class of boys studying the multiplication table to solve a problem in geometry.

Having adversely commented upon conditions existing in our National Guard and the fallacy of deluding ourselves that it can be depended upon as a military reserve, I desire to submit some general conclusions, which are as follows:

First. Troops are enlisted, uniformed, drilled, and mobilized for the sole and ultimate purpose of shooting at an enemy with effect and for nothing else. They may be proficient in drill, thoroughly disciplined, patriotic, and courageous, and have every other qualification of a soldier, but if they be deficient in target practice, they are absolutely useless for the purpose for which they were enlisted—in fact, are an expense and useless incumbrance. I defy anyone to sucessfully refute this general proposition. I would rather command and depend upon a company composed of marksmen than a regiment composed of men who are not. And we all know that the National Guard, generally speaking, is not proficient in this essential qualification, and when we consider the fact that the average guardsman has neither time nor facilities for target practice, we are forced to acknowledge his inefficiency in this indispensable acquirement.

We must learn to discriminate between the essential and nonessential in the formation and education of a national reserve. The essential is target practice. The nonessential is everything else, because the latter can be taught in a month, while rifle practice can not, nor is there any method by which it can be done after troops are called out. The Boer war demonstrated the results of efficiency in rifle practice. They knew not alone how to shoot, but how to hit the objective; they knew their terrain and the rudiments of security and information. Hence it required many times their number and much blood and treasure to subdue them, because the Boers were better shots than their enemy.

[a] The history of our civil war is a most striking illustration of the value of rifle practice. The Southern States at its beginning were sparsely settled as compared with to-day. Game was plentiful, and nearly every one hunted with rifle or shotgun. Hence the proficiency of the average Confederate in rifle practice was naturally greater than that of the average soldier in the Federal Army, and is proven beyond all doubt by statistics given in Fox's book, entitled "Regimental Losses in the Civil War," which shows (p. 537) that the North furnished 2,865,028 men and the Southern States (p. 552) about 600,000 men. There were killed in action 110,070 men on the Federal side and 52,954 on the Confederate side. These statistics presented in a concrete form show that the Confederates killed in action nearly 19 per cent of their own numerical strength, while the Federals killed in action less than 2 per cent of their numerical strength. This result is not a coincidence, but is the direct consequence of rifle practice, and I can present no greater or more forcible illustration of the efficiency of this indispensable military qualification. The Revolutionary war was fought under similar conditions and presents an analogous illustration of similar results.

After troops are called out it is too late to engage in target practice, as they have neither time nor facilities for such work. My regiment, the Second Texas Volunteers, served in two army corps in 1898, and had only one target practice, each man shooting five cartridges and this accomplished practically nothing.

I desire to state in general terms that the value and efficiency of a military force is in direct proportion to its proficiency in marksmanship and no greater.

The history of our Indian wars demonstrated conclusively that they were a foe not to be despised; that their efficiency was not the result of drill; that it was not affected by their inability to march in line; that their knowledge of the science of security and information was not taken from Wagner (but rather did Wagner borrow many of his principles from the Indian), but they knew the terrain of operations, could shoot with effect, and therefore constituted, in spite of disparity of numbers, quite a formidable adversary.

Proficiency in rifle practice gives troops confidence in each other and tends to make them reliable and efficient in the highest degree. Lack of it tends to make them doubtful, and they will often give way when they see their comrades falling around them and are unable to inflict corresponding punishment in return.

I respectfully suggest that what our Government should strive to formulate is a practical, not a theoretical, military reserve, and I have pointed out what I believe every officer will concede to be the practical and essential qualifications of such reserve, viz, target practice, and that all will agree as to the absolute necessity for such requirement.

When we have a reserve thus qualified, and the contingency of war demands its services, it will have to be taught only to move from line or column to the firing line and get to work. Instinct will teach the value of cover and intrenchment, and common sense the importance and formation of guard, outpost, rear guard, and other field duties.

And now as to the qualifications of volunteer and National Guard officers, as fixed by the requirements of General Orders, No. 115, series 1904. The object sought to be attained by this order has not been very successful, very few of our young men being able to spare the time for attendance at Government military schools. I also beg leave to differ as to the curriculum of requirements prescribed for volunteer officers before being placed upon the list of eligibles for commissions in case of war, as, for instance, geography, the higher mathematics, etc. The General Staff in prescribing the several requirements exacted of volunteer officers should give due consideration to the limited time at the command of young men who have to work every day for a living.

I respectfully submit that the qualifications of officers of a military reserve need only be such as—

First. To enable them to handle and care for troops in the field. This includes (a) the ability to teach their men how to take care of their person and general health, (b) preparation of food in the field, and (c) care of arms and equipment.

Second. How to teach their men to shoot with effect, an accomplishment acquired only by target practice.

Third. The value of prompt and implicit obedience to military authority and of correct military deportment.

Fourth. They should acquire a thorough knowledge of the principles of security and information and possess ordinary judgment as to their application to terrain and conditions of minor tactics and firing and field-service regulations.

I unhesitatingly assert that officers having these qualifications will possess as great a degree of practical efficiency as may be required in ordinary military operations. They need not be graduates of military schools, or possess a knowledge of the higher mathematics, but having the qualifications above enumerated they are qualified for command and fairly equipped for every practical duty devolving upon them. A curriculum prescribed for the acquirement of such duties is brief, practical, and in conformity with the limited time and opportunity at the disposal of our young men. When contingencies arise during military operations requiring the higher or technical acquirements, these can be supplied by professional soldiers, who are generally available on such occasions.

Now, if it be conceded that a military force is efficient in proportion to its marksmanship only, and that the National Guard has practically neither time nor opportunity for target practice, that it is impossible to make marksmen after calling out forces for field service, and that all other qualifications can be taught such force within a few weeks after taking the field, then I most respectfully submit that if the Government wishes to secure a military reserve, which is one in fact rather than form, then it must devise plans and methods adapted to the circumstances and environment of the material which must constitute such reserve.

If the attention of our War College be directed to these general propositions (and the general correctness of which can hardly be denied) I am sure the problem will be less difficult of practical solution.

Make rifle competition the subject of intercollegiate contests, and while not superseding athletic sports, encourage such rifle competition in conjunction with field sports. Let it supersede horse shows and other society functions of this nature. Enlist the cooperation of our leisure class and interest this element in making rifle practice "fashionable." If President Roosevelt will interest himself in the subject his influence will result in giving this country in less than five years a national reserve of a half million young marksmen. This acquirement, being intended primarily for national interests, the expense should be borne by the National Government and conducted under its supervision. Thus would we have a standing army and at a small cost.

To summarize all this, we should seek methods that will develop religious patriotism, methods that will make a patriot of an alien, and then teach the country how to defend this sentiment through the results of rifle practice, and we will develop a practical and efficient army reserve, having its foundation in the hearts of the nation, qualified at a month's notice to take its place on the firing line, and accomplish the purposes for which it is mobilized. Thus qualified we will have an army which can carry our flag wherever it may be ordered and competent to uphold the honor and interests of our country wherever it may be unfurled.

To carry out the details of a scheme for the creation of an army reserve along the lines indicated herein, there should be a board created, composed of three or four officers of the General Staff and line, two or three experienced officers of the National Guard, and if it be deemed advisable to formulate a plan requiring the cooperation of those in civil life, there should be added two or more gentlemen prominently identified with educational and social interests, and I think that such board can devise plans that will succeed in creating a practical and efficient army reserve.

L. M. OPENHEIMER,
Late Colonel of Volunteers,
Major-General Texas National Guard, Retired.

[a] This paragraph was contained in the original communication, but omitted in publication of same, because Colonel Church, editor of the Army and Navy Journal, writes and gives his reasons for omitting said paragraph, stating, "I think it best to omit your statistics pertaining to the civil war, for the reason that they will not be accepted as correct, * * * as more careful computation has been made since Fox's book was published."

Colonel Church cites as authority for this assertion statistics quoted from Livermore's book, entitled "Numbers and Losses in the Civil War," showing that the maximum number on the Federal rolls was 3,565,000, and 1,959,225 on the Confederate rolls.

The latter figures can not possibly be correct, as the total military population of the Southern States at the beginning of the civil war was only 1,064,193, and from these figures must be deducted about 63,000 troops furnished by Tennessee and West Virginia to the Federal Army, besides other enlistments from the other Southern States in the Federal Army, and granted that the entire military population enlisted (which probably was the case) the Confederates would have less than 1,000,000 men on the rolls.

Now, let us take Livermore's estimates of casualties, and from this standpoint we find that, say, 1,000,000 Confederates killed in action 110,000 Federals, or, say, a number equal to 11 per cent of their own numerical strength, while 3,565,000 Federals killed in action 94,000 Confederates, equal to 2.72 per cent of their own numerical strength, and when we take into consideration the fact that the Confederates were poorly armed and equipped with ordnance and ammunition, we are forced to the inevitable conclusion that these results must have been due to the increased rifle efficiency of the Confederates.

I desire further to say that these statistics are not presented from any sectional standpoint, but simply to call attention to the important military results of rifle efficiency.

L. M. O.

The Clerk read as follows:

One chief clerk, at the office of the Chief of Staff, $2,000 per annum.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. I observe on pages 9 and 10 provisions for the increase of the clerical force at headquarters, divisions, and departments. I want to ask if these various provisions are to be considered as separate paragraphs or as one paragraph down to and including the bottom of page 10, just before the words "and departments." I observe the period is used at the end of each, but I think the comma is really intended. I want to ask, because if the point of order is to be made it would be too late to wait until the bottom of page 10 is reached.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would understand that the word "paragraph" is used in its popular acceptation, and at the end of each two lines on page 9.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent that all of the paragraph in regard to clerks may be read and the point of order raised then, because the same question is involved in any one of them.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the portion of the bill down to and including line 21, on page 10, may be read and considered as one paragraph.

Mr. HULL. I should say down to and including line 16, on page 9, is where the clerk part comes in. The captain of the watch, and all that, is another proposition entirely.

Mr. TAWNEY. Down to and including line 13, on page 10.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Six clerks at $1,800 each per annum.
Fifteen clerks at $1,600 each per annum.
Twenty-seven clerks at $1,400 each per annum.
Seventy-three clerks at $1,200 each per annum.
One hundred clerks at $1,000 each per annum.
Two clerks at $900 each per annum.
One clerk at $720 per annum.
One captain of the watch at $900 per annum.
Three watchmen at $720 each per annum.
One gardener at $720 per annum.
One packer at $840 per annum.
Two mesengers at $840 each per annum.
Seventy-four messengers at $720 each per annum.
Two messengers at $600 each per annum.
One laborer at $660 per annum.
Two laborers at $600 each per annum.
One laborer at $480 per annum.
Five charwomen at $240 each per annum.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order now against the paragraph on page 9, line 8, down to and including line 15; also line 19, down to and including line 24, and from line 1 down to line 13, on page 10, on the ground that these paragraphs provide for an increase in the clerical force of the headquarters, divisions, and departments of the Army, and such increases are not authorized by law. However, if the gentleman in charge of the bill desires, I will simply reserve the point of order.

Mr. HULL. Oh, no; I prefer to have the gentleman make it now, so that we can argue it. I would like to know what the gentleman's reason is for making it. That statement is not any reason.

Mr. TAWNEY. Very well, I will make it. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that section 169 of the Revised Statutes expressly provides as follows:

Each head of a Department is authorized to employ in his Department such number of clerks of the several classes recognized by law and such messengers, assistant messengers, copyists, watchmen, laborers, and other employees, and at such rates of compensation, respectively, as may be appropriated for by Congress from year to year.

That is the only law authorizing a provision for additional clerks in appropriation bills. Under the decision of the Attorney-General the term "Department," as used in this statute, means only Departments presided over by a Cabinet officer in the city of Washington. I will say that this identical point was passed upon only a short time ago in respect to increases of clerks in the postal service as distinguished from clerks in the Post-Office Department. The point of order was made on the ground that under Rule XXI, clause 2, there was no authority in law for the proposed increase of the clerks, and then the further point was made, which I have referred to, namely, that under section 169 of Revised Statutes these clerks proposed were to be employed in connection with the postal service, not in connection with the Department, and therefore they were unauthorized by law.

The paragraphs that I have named propose to increase the clerical force at headquarters of divisions and departments and Office of the Chief of Staff by seventeen clerks, and requires an appropriation of $21,080 more than was provided for by the appropriation bill for the clerical force of these divisions and division headquarters for the fiscal year 1905, and $66,880 more than was appropriated for the same clerical force in 1900, when the Army was up to its full maximum limit, while at the present time it is at its minimum limit, and I fail to see the necessity for this increase of clerical force under those circumstances, and I therefore, for that reason, make the point of order.

Mr. HULL. Just a word about the matter. This matter was fought over some years ago when the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. HOPKINS, was in the chair. There is no place provided by law for any of these clerks except the appropriation bill of the Committee on Military Affairs. At that time a small increase was demanded by the Government on account of an increase of the Department. The point of order was raised, and the Chair held it was not subject to the point of order, and the question was to be decided by a vote of the House, as I remember now. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the point of order lies against this provision for additional clerks, it will lie against the provision for one dollar for one clerk, on the theory that they must be provided for by some other law. The same statute was quoted then that the gentleman from Minnesota quotes now. The proposition is an increase of about half what was asked for by the Army. If this point of order shall be overruled and we go into the merits of the question, if the committee can not show the absolute necessity for the small increase that we have given in this bill, then the House can strike out every increase we propose to make. I do not feel like going into this more fully now or imposing upon the Chair, after so arduous a day's service as this, any further trouble to-night, and I therefore move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 14397—the Army appropriation bill—and had directed him to report that they had come to no resolution thereon.

REPRINT OF ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I am requested by several Members of the House to ask for a reprint of the Army appropriation bill, as it is impossible to get copies of the bill. I therefore ask unanimous consent that a reprint of the bill may be ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 38. An act for the erection of a statue to the memory of Gen. James Miller at Peterboro, N. H.—to the Committee on the Library.

S. 4394. An act to increase the limit of cost of the post-office and court-house at Evanston, Wyo.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 4130. An act to authorize the Capital City Improvement Company, of Helena, Mont., to construct a dam across the Missouri River—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 1792. An act to provide for the erection of a public building at Baker City, in the State of Oregon—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 1694. An act for the erection of a public building at Carthage, Mo.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 690. An act to authorize the President of the United States to appoint John Gibbon captain and quartermaster in the Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 580. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Moscow, in the State of Idaho—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 398. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Greenville, in the State of Texas—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 333. An act in regard to a monumental column to commemorate the battle of Princeton, and appropriating $30,000 therefor—to the Committee on the Library.

S. 111. An act to aid in the erection of a monument or memorial at Point Pleasant, W. Va., to commemorate the battle of the Revolution fought at that point between the Colonial troops and Indians, October 10, 1774—to the Committee on the Library.

S. 4128. An act permitting the building of a dam across the Red Lake River at or near the junction of Black River with said Red Lake River, in Red Lake County, Minn.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 3294. An act to provide for the erection of a public building at Alton, Ill.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 1878. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon in the city of Provo, State of Utah—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 213. An act granting an increase of pension to John M. Doersch;

S. 207. An act granting an increase of pension to Marion F. Howe;
S. 201. An act granting an increase of pension to Lyman E. Farrand;
S. 186. An act granting an increase of pension to George P. Howe;

He also (for Mr. ANKENY) presented a petition of sundry citizens of St. John, Wash., praying for the enactment of legislation to remove the duty on denaturized alcohol; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PENROSE presented a petition of Unity Grange, No. 1249, Patrons of Husbandry, of Laceyville; of Mount Herman Grange, No. 1120, Patrons of Husbandry, of Mount Herman; of Leatherwood Grange, No. 625, Patrons of Husbandry, and of Liberty Grange, No. 1182, Patrons of Husbandry, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation to remove the duty on denaturized alcohol; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Bellevue, Pa., praying for an investigation of the charges made and filed against Hon. REED SMOOT, a Senator from the State of Utah; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also presented a petition of the Book Concern of the African Methodist Episcopal Church of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the removal of the tariff on composing and linotype machines and the parts thereof; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the National Board of Trade, praying for the enactment of legislation to facilitate the exportation of goods manufactured in the United States from imported raw materials; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the National Board of Trade, praying for the passage of the so-called "pure-food bill;" which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1483) for the relief of Col. Medad C. Martin, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. NELSON on January 25, 1906, proposing to increase the grade of the United States consulate at Amsterdam, Netherlands, from Class IV, Schedule B, to Class III of said schedule, intended to be proposed to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. BEVERIDGE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 4773) for the payment of the expenses of the delegates to the Third International Conference of American States; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 97) authorizing assignment of pay of teachers and other employees of the Bureau of Education in Alaska, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported an amendment proposing to appropriate $4,926.27 to pay the owners of the Norwegian steamship Nicaragua for loss sustained in saving the life of an American citizen during the political disturbances at Bluefields, Nicaragua, in 1894, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. BURKETT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 12948) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Bierley;

A bill (H. R. 12903) granting an increase of pension to Daniel T. Ferrier;

A bill (H. R. 9593) granting a pension to Charles M. Priddy; and

A bill (H. R. 7478) granting a pension to George W. Jackson.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13673) to extend the provisions of the homestead laws to certain lands in the Yellowstone Forest Reserve, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. TILLMAN, on the 26th instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 10,000 extra copies of the testimony taken by the Committee on Interstate Commerce in the consideration of the so-called "railroad rate bill," 3,000 for the use of the Senate and 7,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. TILLMAN, on the 26th instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 10,000 extra copies of the digest, prepared under the direction of the committee, of the testimony taken by the Committee on Interstate Commerce in the consideration of the so-called "railroad rate bill," 3,000 for the use of the Senate and 7,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 4774) relating to the movements and anchorage of vessels in Hampton Roads, the harbors of Norfolk and Newport News, and adjacent waters, in the State of Virginia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SCOTT introduced a bill (S. 4775) granting an increase of pension to Thomas A. Maulsby; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SMOOT introduced a bill (S. 4776) to reimburse George W. Young, postmaster at Wanship, Utah, for loss of postage stamps; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McENERY introduced a bill (S. 4777) for the relief of George H. Green and another, administrators of George W. Green, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 4778) to amend section 653 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, relative to assessment life insurance companies and associations; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. I introduce a bill, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 4779) relating to the salaries of the President and Vice-President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the members of the Cabinet, Senators and Representatives and Delegates in Congress, was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after March 4, 1909, the compensation of the herein described officers or members of the executive, legislative, and judicial departments of the Government of the United States shall be as follows: The President of the United States, $75,000 per annum; the Vice-President of the United States, $15,000 per annum; the Speaker of the House of Representatives, $12,000 per annum; each member of the Cabinet, $15,000 per annum; Senators of the United States and Representatives and Delegates in Congress, $7,500 per annum.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 4780) granting a pension to Mary L. Wilkes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 4781) granting an increase of pension to Joseph N. Reid; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 4782) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Augustin H. Finn; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PILES introduced a bill (S. 4783) to quiet title to certain lots in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GAMBLE introduced a bill (S. 4784) granting an increase of pension to Lemuel Cross; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PENROSE introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 4785) granting an increase of pension to Nehemiah Brundege (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4786) granting an increase of pension to George W. Coughanour (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4787) granting an increase of pension to Nicholas Vautier;

A bill (S. 4788) granting an increase of pension to Alexander Bentley;

A bill (S. 4789) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin H. King;

A bill (S. 4790) granting an increase of pension to Edward W. Smith;

A bill (S. 4791) granting an increase of pension to Levi S. Hackett; and

A bill (S. 4792) granting an increase of pension to David Evans.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 4793) to correct the military record of Thomas Amick; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4794) to correct the military record of John McPherson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4795) for the relief of Sarah R. Malone; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HEYBURN introduced a bill (S. 4796) granting an increase of pension to Lorinda J. White; which was read twice by its title, and, with the acompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

Mr. CLAPP. I introduce a joint resolution which I ask may be read and lie on the table.

The joint resolution (S. R. 38) extending the tribal relations and government of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That immediately upon the dissolution of the present tribal governments of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole tribes the government of said tribes, respectively, shall devolve upon the Secretary of the Interior, and the tribal existence and tribal relations shall not be in any wise affected by this change in the form of government, but shall continue unaffected until all property of such tribes, or the proceeds thereof, shall be distributed among the individual members of said tribes.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire to give notice that I shall object to unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate joint resolution 37, introduced yesterday by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], and will move to substitute for that the joint resolution which I have just introduced.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will lie on the table.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. PLATT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 14396) to incorporate the Lake Erie and Ohio River Ship Canal, to define the powers thereof, and to facilitate interstate commerce; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SMOOT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12707) to enable the people of Oklahoma and of the Indian Territory to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and to enable the people of New Mexico and of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. FULTON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 for the construction of a combination dipper and suction dredge and two dump scows for use at the Oregon coast harbors, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $180,000 to pay to the executor or administrator of the late C. N. Vann and W. R. Adair, respectively, the balance due under the resolution of the national council of the Osage Nation of Indians passed and approved on June 26, 1873, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

DAMS AND POWER STATIONS AT MUSCLE SHOALS, ALABAMA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. MORGAN. There is a concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, proposing amendments in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 297) to authorize the construction of dams and power stations on the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals, Alabama.

Mr. HALE. It was read yesterday. There is no necessity for reading it again.

Mr. MORGAN. There is no occasion for reading it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has already been read. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the concurrent resolution?

Mr. FRYE. Does my colleague withdraw his objection?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I arrested the resolution last night because I was not satisfied that it was in accordance with the usual method of procedure. I find that it is the process which has been resorted to heretofore in such cases. The bill came originally from the House, and this resolution comes from the House. I withdraw any further objections to its adoption.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 10067. An act authorizing the disposition of surplus and allotted lands on the Yakima Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, which can be irrigated under the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the "reclamation act," and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

H. R. 14396. An act to incorporate the Lake Erie and Ohio River Ship Canal, to define the powers thereof, and to facilitate interstate commerce, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I ask that what is commonly known as the "railroad rate bill" be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read by its title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, this proposed rate legislation raises some of the most important questions we have had to deal with since the civil war. It is so contrary to the spirit of our institutions and of such drastic and revolutionary character that, if not in its immediate effect, at least as a precedent, the consequences are likely to be most unusual and far-reaching. In view of these facts I make no apology for taking the time of the Senate to speak at length upon the subject, although upon this occasion I shall confine myself chiefly to the legal questions arising. I do not speak for anybody else, only for myself.

It may be helpful, as a sort of preface, to briefly sketch the development of our railroad system, indicate the present situation, and make some general observations that have no reference to any particular bill or any particular plan that has been proposed, but which have application to the general proposition to confer the rate-making power on the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Speaking in this way, railroad building in this country commenced about 1830. Its beginning was like that which we are now witnessing as to interurban electric railroads. At the beginning all railroad companies were organized under the State laws, and, as a rule, to build only short intra-State lines. The principal cities were first connected. The less important connections followed. Branches, spurs, and lateral lines came later. In that early period the different railroads were so separate and distinct in their organization and operation, and considered themselves such competitors of each other, that they resisted all suggestions of cooperation or of common use of tracks and cars. They went so far, in some instances, as to construct their tracks of different gauge, for the purpose, among others, of making it impossible for the cars of one line to pass over the tracks of any other line. In that day there were no through routes for either passengers or freight. To travel by rail from St. Louis, Chicago, Detroit, Cincinnati, Columbus, or Cleveland to New York involved repeated changes of cars.

The railroad business of the country continued upon these lines of separability and individual corporate action with but very little, if any, consolidation until the civil war, when the necessity for the prompt transportation over long distances of troops and supplies demonstrated the advisability and necessity of through lines and harmonious systems with accompanying cooperation in management. Then commenced in a general way the wiser policy of connecting lines and operating them in harmony and for the better accommodation of their patrons. Finally there came, as an authority and encouragement for this new policy, the Act of Congress of June 15, 1866, which provided:

That every railroad company in the United States whose road is operated by steam, its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to carry upon and over its road, boats, bridges, and ferries all passengers, troops, Government supplies, mails, freight, and property on their way from one State to another, and to receive compensation therefor, and to connect with roads of other States so as to form continuous lines for the transportation of the same to the place of destination. (R. S., sec. 5258.)

Under the protection and impetus given by this legal sanction the policy of cooperation rapidly developed, and although the period following the civil war was one of declining values until the resumption of specie payments, the construction of railroads rapidly increased, particularly in the Western States, into which the tides of population were pouring. During this period there was not only a constantly increasing demand for united and cooperative and interdependent relations, which led to the expenditure of many millions of dollars to reconstruct roads according to a standard gauge and reequip them to correspond, but there was also a universal demand for new roads and new lines of roads. New settlements brought new demands, and the rapid growth of population, towns, cities, and industries gave promise of such increasing and widespread prosperity that railroad building was in many instances unduly stimulated. In consequence, roads were built not only where there was immediate necessity, with fairly remunerative returns upon capital invested, but they were in many instances improvidently or prematurely built, and as a result there were in such instances for years less than fair returns, while in many cases there were no returns, but only losses for the investors. This rapid construction, spreading over the whole country, in all directions, but much of it unremunerative, led to the fiercest competition. Each road struggled not only to develop business on its own lines, but, by reducing rates, to carry the products of its own patrons to the most distant markets possible, invading new territory wherever they could. This brought about a conflict of interest in both the origination of business and in the finding of markets for that business. Roads that were built prematurely, or built improvidently, seeking for business sufficient to pay operating expenses and fixed charges, resorted to every method that competition could suggest to control patronage. In this behalf not only low long-distance rates but secret rebates, preferences, and discriminations of almost every character were resorted to. Many roads failed to get sufficient business and passed into the hands of receivers and were reorganized, some of them repeatedly.

The situation became so unsatisfactory that finally Congress passed the Interstate Commerce Act of February, 1887. That law, reenforced by a number of amendatory and supplementary statutes, has been in force ever since. The Interstate Commerce Commission, by it provided, has rendered much valuable service. Through the operation of these statutes, under the administration of this board, many of the evils originally complained of leading to the enactment of the statutes have been remedied. It is commonly conceded that the railroad situation in the United States is better to-day, measured by the efficiency of its service, the cost of that service, and the treatment of shippers and passengers in the rendition of that service, than it has ever been before, notwithstanding there are many evils remaining that should be in some suitable manner provided against.

In the meanwhile the railroad business of the country has grown to enormous proportions. From the last annual report of the Interstate Commerce Commission it appears that the total railroad-track mileage amounts to about 212,000 miles; that the equipment of the same amounts to 46,743 locomotives, 1,798,561 cars, and that on account of these properties there have been issued in the aggregate almost $14,000,000,000 of bonds and stocks, which are held almost altogether in this country, the owners consisting of thousands of individuals, in addition to savings banks, trust companies, insurance companies, and other kinds of institutions whose stockholders, numbering into the millions, are thus interested in these securities. It further appears from this report of the Interstate Commerce Commission that there are about 1,300,000 individuals, officers, agents, and employees on the pay rolls of these companies, to whom these railroads pay out annually in salaries and wages about $800,000,000. It is further shown by this report that these roads carried the equivalent last year of more than two billion passengers the distance of one mile, and that the freight was the equivalent of the carriage for one mile of 174,522,089,577 tons; that the passengers were carried at the rate of about two cents per mile, and the freight at the average rate of .78 of a cent per ton mile; that the gross earnings aggregated almost $2,000,000,000; while their operating expenses amounted in round figures to $1,338,000,000; that the net earnings amounted in round figures to $636,000,000.

These figures show the enormous, almost incomprehensible aggregate of values invested in railroad properties, and the tremendous, far-reaching character of the business of these carriers; the great number of persons immediately employed in connection therewith, and that there are millions of people not immediately connected with the railroads who are interested in their prosperity as holders of their securities and otherwise.

It is not to be wondered at that the upbuilding of such great interests should have been attended with many abuses and evil practices. It would be strange if it had not been. Rather the wonder is that these abuses and evil practices have not been greater than they have been. It would be strange, indeed, if there were not now, notwithstanding the improvements in the railroad situation, evil practices and abuses still remaining for which a remedy should be provided.

These evils are generally speaking of three classes—excessive rates, rebates, and discriminations.

EXCESSIVE RATES.

Of these, excessive rates are the least serious. Taking the whole country over the general average for the transportation of freight per ton per mile is less than it is in any other country. There has been some advance during the last five years, owing largely to the increased cost of labor and general operating expenses, but the average cost at this time is shown by the last report of the Interstate Commission to be, as we have seen, only 0.78 of a cent per ton mile, which is less than one-third of what it was twenty-five years ago and materially less than it is in any other country of the world. While all this is true there are, nevertheless, some instances, perhaps many in the aggregate, where rates in and of themselves are excessive, and yet, comparatively, these are but few and unimportant. This is shown by the testimony of all who have spoken on the subject. The Interstate Commerce Commissioners in their annual reports have repeatedly stated in effect what they said in their report for 1893, that "extortionate charges are seldom the subject of complaint" and that "rates as a whole are low enough."

Mr. Clements, a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, testified before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, page 2237, volume 4, "The Commission has repeatedly asserted, and, I think, established by its official statistics, that, taken as a whole, the American rates are reasonably low, particularly upon the bulk of low-grade raw materials."

Mr. Fifer, another member of the Commission, testified before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate, at page 3349, as follows: "I want to add in closing that I do not believe, except in some instances where I have stated, that the railroad rates throughout this country are excessively high at all. I have never believed that, and neither do I believe there would be, or ought to be, any great disturbance of these rates, whatever powers the Commission might be invested with."

On this subject President Roosevelt said in his remarks to the railroad employees who called upon him at the White House in November, 1905, to protest against this proposed legislation. on the ground that they feared it might prejudice them by putting their wages in jeopardy: "There has been comparatively little complaint to me of the railroad rates being, as a whole, too high."

Numerous other witnesses might be cited to this same general effect, but it is sufficient to say that all witnesses—shippers, railroad men, and others—without regard to whether they favored the proposition to confer the rate-making power on the Interstate Commerce Commission or were opposed, testified in substantial concurrence with the quotations made.

Nevertheless there should be some prompt and effective remedy provided by the law against excessive rates to whatever extent they may be indulged in and wherever they may be found.

REBATES.

A more serious class of evils, because more prejudicial in their consequences and results, are rebates. They are granted under many forms and guises, and include not only money payments, but all kinds of discriminations between shippers, such as undue allowances for terminal charges, elevator charges, refrigerator charges, icing charges, and private cars, false weights, improper classification, under billing, and many others too numerous to mention. The practice of giving rebates was a result of sharp competition between roads for business. At one time almost, if not quite, every road in the country indulged in the practice. Shippers who secured such preferences had an unjust advantage over their competitors, and the railroads that granted them suffered in the loss of revenues. The strongest and most prosperous railroads, although, like the others, granting these rebates, were always, as a rule, anxious to put a stop to the practice. In that behalf many traffic agreements and arrangements, of one kind and another, were entered into, including many others that were known as pooling arrangements. All these arrangements and agreements proved ineffectual to a greater or less extent. The pooling arrangements were more nearly observed than any others, but they were unfortunately named, and because they prevented, in some measure at least, free and active competition they were always unpopular. In consequence they were prohibited by the interstate-commerce act of 1887. Subsequent to that statute traffic agreements and arrangements were chiefly relied upon. They were in effect simply agreements between competing roads as to what were regarded as reasonable schedules of rates, coupled with the further agreement to maintain the same.

But the Supreme Court of the United States in what is known as the Trans-Missouri case, reported in volume 166, page 290, U. S. Reports, and the Joint Traffic case, reported in 171 U. S. Reports, 576, held that these traffic arrangements were in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law, which, until that litigation was commenced, was not generally understood to apply to railroads; they being fully regulated, as it was thought, by the Interstate Commerce Act. The prohibition against pooling and the invalidity, as established by these decisions, of traffic agreements and arrangements left the roads without any adequate remedy against the practice of rebates, which each road felt compelled, in justice to itself, to indulge in because its competitor did; the weak roads to get business, the strong roads to hold it. Very largely on this account the tremendous consolidations of railroad properties resulted which have occurred during the last five or six years. These consolidations have been made until practically the entire railroad system of the United States has been brought under the control of some six or seven general systems, such as the Pennsylvania, the Vanderbilts, the Rock Island, etc. The effect of these consolidations upon rebates and discriminations as to persons and places was no doubt to restrict them somewhat, but the practices continued to such an extent, and with such consequent dissatisfaction, on the part of shippers and railroads alike, that the Congress, to provide an efficient remedy against them enacted, February 19, 1903, what is known as the Elkins law.

THE ELKINS LAW.

The general scope, character, purpose, and salutary effect of this law are set forth fully by the Interstate Commerce Commission, in its Seventeenth Annual Report, dated December 15, 1903, from which I quote as follows:

Its provisions are mainly designed to prevent or more effectually reach those infractions of law, like the payment of rebates and kindred practices, which are classed as misdemeanors.

In the first place, the recent amendment makes the railway corporation itself liable to prosecution in all cases where its officers and agents are liable under the former law. Such officers and agents continue to be liable as heretofore, but this liability is now extended to the corporation which they represent. This change in the law corrects a defect which has always been a source of embarrassment to the Commission, as has been explained in previous reports, because it gave immunity to the principal and beneficiary of a guilty transaction. As a practical matter, it is believed that much benefit will result from the fact that proceedings can now be taken against the corporation.

The amended law has abolished the penalty of imprisonment, and the only punishment now provided is the imposition of fines. As the corporation can not be imprisoned or otherwise punished for misdemeanors than by money penalties, it was deemed expedient that no greater punishment be visited upon the offending officer or agent. The various arguments in favor of this change have been stated in former reports and need not here be repeated. Whether the good results claimed by its advocates will be realized is by no means certain, but the present plan should doubtless be continued until its utility is further tested.

Without further reference to the changes effected by this amendatory legislation the Commission feels warranted in saying that its beneficial bearing became evident from the time of its passage. It has proved a wise and salutary enactment. It has corrected serious defects in the original law and greatly aided the attainment of some of the purposes for which that law was enacted. No one familiar with railway conditions can expect that rate cutting and other secret devices will immediately and wholly disappear, but there is basis for a confident belief that such offenses are no longer characteristic of railway operations. That they have greatly diminished is beyond doubt, and their recurrence to the extent formerly known is altogether unlikely. Indeed, it is believed that never before in the railroad history of this country have tariff rates been so well or so generally observed as they are at the present time.

* * * * * * *

In its present form the law appears to be about all that can be provided against rate cuting in the way of prohibitive and punitive legislation. Unless further experience discloses defects not now perceived, we do not anticipate the need of further amendments of the same character and designed to accomplish the same purpose.

In its Nineteenth Annual Report, under date of December 14, 1905, the Interstate Commerce Commission, at page 13, said:

REBATES AND THE ELKINS LAW.

In our annual report for 1903 we endeavored to explain the changes in the regulating statute effected by the Elkins law, so called, which was approved in the previous February, and made some favorable comments upon its operation. A similar opinion was expressed in the report made a year ago. Further experience, however, compels us to modify in some degree the hopeful expectations then entertained. Not only have various devices for evading the law been brought into use, but the actual payment of rebates as such has been here and there resumed. Instances of this kind have been established by convincing proof, on which prosecutions have been commenced and are now pending. More frequently the unjust preference is brought about by methods which may escape the penalties of the law, but which plainly operate to defeat its purpose. This does not imply any want of satisfaction with the act of 1903, which we regard as a most admirable measure, nor any belief that there is a general return to former practices, for the fact is undoubtedly otherwise; but it does mean that this type of evil has by no means disappeared and that it is liable to increase unless effectively restrained.

They might have added that all that was necessary to "effectively restrain" that "type of evil" was to enforce the law; and that the enforcement of the law was in the hands of themselves and the Department of Justice under the general control of the President, and that the law against murder, burglary, robbery, arson, and similar crimes is as good as man has been able to devise, but that nevertheless we still occasionally hear of the commission of these offenses.

But there is further testimony as to the character of the Elkins law.

Speaking on the subject of the Elkins law and rebates, Mr. E. P. Bacon, in his statement before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, said, January 16, 1905, page 16, et seq., vol. 1, Interstate Commerce Committee Hearings:

I consider that the difficulty of discrimination between individual shippers is fully met by the Elkins Act of 1903. I do not see how the English language can prohibit that in any clearer terms than is done by that act, nor do I see how any means of enforcing that prohibition beyond what is provided in that act can be formulated.

I wish to say, further, that while the Elkins Act of 1903 went as far, it seems to me, as it is possible to go, yet it remains with the Commission on its part, and the Department of Justice on its part, to enforce the provisions of that act. If they are thoroughly enforced, the evils of rebates will be effectually remedied.

I really regard rebates, however, as having been fully provided for by the Elkins Act of 1903, and with the addition of some machinery I believe that the practice of paying rebates can be wholly prevented.

Mr. Bacon further testified on this subject, page 1764, vol. 3, as follows:

The suppression of rebates is only one of the evils that have been aimed at by the commercial organizations. That evil has been considered by the associations as having been effectually remedied by the passage of the Elkins Act of 1903.

S. H. Cowan, esq., one of the leading and one of the ablest of all the advocates of the proposition to confer the rate-making power on the Interstate Commerce Commission, said, on the same subject in his testimony before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, at page 112, vol. 1:

Fortunately, rebates have stopped. It was a fortunate thing that they did, because it was made the means of discriminations between individuals where the neighbor can engage in the purchase and sale of articles because he gets lower rates.

Governor Cummins of Iowa said on this subject in his testimony before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate, at page 2052–3, Vol. 3—

> I do not think rebates and discriminations will ever disappear wholly, and I say frankly that I do not believe they will ever disappear so long as there is the element of competition. In business you may find some way of awarding favors, but I do not know of any way in which you can make the law more perfect on that point than it is now.

Commissioner Clements, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, said in his testimony before the Interstate Commerce Committee, page 3238, Vol. 4, speaking of the Elkins Act:

> * * * The Elkins Act is an act against all forbidden discriminations. * * * We have said that it has had a tremendous effect in the diminution of these abuses. * * * I have not a doubt in the world that the practice has been greatly diminished since the Elkins Act was passed.

Commissioner Knapp, chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, said in his testimony at page 3306, Vol. 4:

> Now, if I might add one word as to the Elkins bill. A more effective and complete measure for its purpose has not come within my observation. It is invaluable.

> * * * I think that the payment of rebates, as such, practically ceased when the Elkins bill went into effect, and it has only been resumed in aggravated instances, where apparently there could not be anything else done.

Numerous other citations might be made of similar statements from those who have been in such relation to railroad transportation as to enjoy special opportunities for knowing the nature and effect of the Elkins law as measured by its practical operation. In fact, all such witnesses who spoke on the subject testified to practically the same effect. This testimony, therefore, warrants the statement that the Elkins law has proven a most efficient measure for good, and that since its passage the practice of giving rebates and allowing discriminations among shippers has been largely discontinued, and that in so far as there are still violations of the statute of that character they can be broken up altogether by a mere enforcement of its provisions.

There has been no serious attempt to enforce this law to prevent discriminations as to localities, but a glance at its provisions will suffice to show that it is as broad, direct, explicit, and efficient to remedy that kind of an evil, wherever it may exist, as it has been found to be as to personal discriminations. That the law has not been tested in this respect is not due to any fault of the law, but because no one has seen fit to invoke it.

This law has been upheld by the Supreme Court; first, in the case of the Missouri Pacific Railway Company v. United States, 189 U. S., 274, which was a case of alleged discrimination against a locality, commenced before the passage of the act. The court held that the proceedings there under consideration could be maintained under that statute and remanded the case for further proceeding.

It has been again upheld and its efficiency has been again strikingly demonstrated by the decision of the Supreme Court rendered only a few days ago in the Chesapeake and Ohio and New Haven coal case, where shipments at less than the published rates, under the guise of delivering coal that the Chesapeake and Ohio had sold to the New Haven, was enjoined immediately on the filing of the bill of complaint, the parties to that important controversy thus getting full relief almost from the very moment when they instituted their proceedings therefor.

All this was virtually admitted by the House Committee when they said in their report that no further legislation was necessary as to classification or relative rates, and that—

> The law of to-day would be fairly satisfactory to all shippers if the spirit of fairness required by it had controlled the conduct of the carriers and the necessity for the proposed legislation is the result of and is made necessary by the misconduct of parties who are now most clamorous against additional restraint. If the carriers had in good faith accepted existing statutes and obeyed them there would have been no necessity for increasing the powers of the Commission or the enactment of new coercive measures.

It would have been nearer the truth if the committee had said that the law we now have is practically sufficient, if properly enforced, and that the fault, giving rise to conditions that are supposed to call for additional legislation, is not with the existing law, but with the officials who have not enforced it.

Such was the general situation when, in December, 1904, a demand arose for legislation giving the rate-making power to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

This demand had no place in the discussions of the political campaign of that year. It was not heard of until after the election.

It had been set forth a number of times in a general way in Democratic platforms, but it never commanded any serious attention until the President mentioned it in his annual message.

His popularity was so great and he so thoroughly commanded the confidence of all classes of people, that there was an immediate and very general acceptance of his recommendation.

This found expression in the Esch-Townsend bill, which passed the House at the last session almost unanimously, but failed to receive favorable consideration in the Senate.

The President renewed his recommendation in his last annual message, and the House has now, with even greater unanimity, passed the Hepburn bill.

HEPBURN BILL.

This bill increases the powers of the Commission in many respects, but I shall call attention to only its most important provisions of this character.

It makes the order of the Commission condemning a rate effective and thereby disposes of that rate, and then authorizes the Commission to name a new rate and put it into operation in place of the condemned rate.

It authorizes the Commission to compel disagreeing railroads that have nothing in common except a physical connection to operate jointly as through routes on such rates and terms as it may impose.

It dispenses with jury trials in an important class of actions to recover money by providing a procedure that makes such trials impossible.

It imposes such extreme, unreasonable, and burdensome penalties as to probably invalidate the measure in that respect. It does not provide for a proper review by the courts of the orders of the Commission, but seeks to exclude the same.

There are other provisions that merit attention, but these raise all the questions I care to discuss at this time.

There is a common agreement that, although the railroad situation is vastly improved as compared with what it was only a few years ago, there are still, as there probably always will be, many evils to remedy, and to that end there should be some kind of appropriate legislation.

The principal difference of opinion is as to whether to accomplish this common purpose the legislation to be enacted should be of an amendatory character, such as to work out these remedies in the courts, where ordinary controversies are settled, or should be such as to confer the rate-making power to be exercised in the way provided by this bill on the Interstate Commerce Commission.

I believe in the court plan, as contradistinguished from the rate-making plan, not alone because it is, as I shall endeavor to show, much simpler, much more expeditious, much more efficient, and without expense to the shipper, but because, in addition to all that, it avoids all legal and constitutional questions, while the rate-making plan as set forth in this bill encounters a number of such questions that are of the most serious character, and some of them, in my judgment, fatal.

HAS CONGRESS THE POWER TO MAKE RATES?

In the first place, there arises at the very beginning of this controversy a most serious question as to the power of Congress to fix rates at all.

I know it has been assumed throughout all this discussion, as it has been in framing this bill, that we have that power and that it is unquestioned, and I know that there are many expressions to be found in the opinions of the Supreme Court of the United States that indicate a similar assumption on the part of that court, but nevertheless, the fact remains that the court has never yet passed on that question, and there are many eminent lawyers who are of the opinion that the court will hold, when it does decide that question, that Congress does not have that power.

Their reasoning seems to me to be sound, and the effect of it absolutely fatal to this entire scheme of legislation.

I am confirmed in this opinion by what the Supreme Court said in the Northern Securities case (193 U. S., 343), where, after discussing the nature of the combination there under consideration and the evil consequences thereof, Mr. Justice Harlan, speaking for the court, said:

> Will it be said that Congress can meet such emergencies by prescribing the rates by which interstate carriers shall be governed in the transportation of freight and passengers? If Congress has the power to fix such rates—and upon that question we express no opinion—it does not choose to exercise its power in that way or to that extent.

This statement, apparently not necessary to the disposition of that case, is, at least, an announcement to the legal profession that the question of the power of Congress to fix rates in the exercise of its power to regulate commerce is an open one, upon which the court will hear argument whenever that question may be presented. If it be an open question for the Supreme Court, so, too, is it an open question for the Senate, and no mere assumption should be allowed to dispose of it. We can not dispose of it by ignoring it. It must be argued in the courts, and I shall, therefore, discuss it now, at the beginning, where it properly belongs.

CONGRESS HAS NO POWER WITH RESPECT TO INTERSTATE COMMERCE EXCEPT THAT WHICH IS CONFERRED BY THE COMMERCE CLAUSE OF THE CONSTITUTION "TO REGULATE COMMERCE WITH FOREIGN NATIONS, AND AMONG THE SEVERAL STATES, AND WITH THE INDIAN TRIBES," AND TO ENACT ALL LEGISLATION NECESSARY TO GIVE EFFECT TO THIS POWER.

The controlling questions arising upon the construction of this clause are, first, what is "commerce," and, second, what is included in the power "to regulate?"

It was stated in 9 Wheaton, 229—

Commerce, in its simplest signification, means an exchange of goods; but in the advancement of society, labor, transportation, intelligence, care, and various mediums of exchange become commodities and enter into commerce; the subject, the vehicle, the agent, and their various operations become the objects of commercial regulations.

Mr. Justice Curtis said in Cooley v. The Board of Wardens, 12 Howard, 316:

The power to regulate navigation is the power to prescribe rules in conformity with which navigation must be carried on. It extends to the persons who conduct it as well as to the instruments used.

Mr. Justice Field said in Ferry Company v. Pennsylvania, 114 United States, 203:

Commerce among the States consists of intercourse and traffic between their citizens, and includes the transportation of persons and property and the navigation of public waters for that purpose, as well as the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities. The power to regulate that commerce with foreign nations, vested in Congress, is the power to prescribe the rules by which it shall be governed. * * * The power embraces within its control all the instrumentalities by which that commerce may be carried on.

Numerous other cases to the same effect might be cited.

This power to regulate commerce is, therefore, as to interstate commerce, a power to regulate railroads, because they are a facility for the transportation of passengers and freight, and this general power necessarily includes the power to regulate all cars or vehicles that may be used, together with all appliances, agencies, equipments, and conveniences that may be employed in the transportation of persons and property. It also embraces trains, crews, the conductors, brakemen, switchmen, engineers, firemen, train dispatchers, freight, and passenger depots.

In maritime commerce with foreign nations this power to regulate extends to and regulates the vessels employed, the officers and crews navigating such vessels, the places and conveniences for embarkation and landing, appliances and equipment for the protection, safety, and comfort of passengers, and the protection and safety of property on board, including the signals and rules to be observed by the carrier or his employees and servants in navigation, and others of like character and purpose.

These definitions of "commerce" are broad and numerous, but broad and numerous as they are no one has ever yet named the price at which the carrier should sell his service of transportation as included within the term. Apparently until recently it has not occurred to any one to contend that the charge for this service is either an article or an instrument or a facility of commerce falling within the power of Congress to regulate The reason is plain. No one has included it because it is not commerce nor the subject of commerce.

It is an elementary proposition that the law, whether statutory or constitutional, is what the framers of it intended it should be, if that intention can be ascertained and be not in conflict with the language employed, and that it never is what, in the nature of things, it could not have been intended to be.

What, then, was the intent of the framers of the Constitution when they put the commerce clause into that instrument?

I shall not stop to gather this intent from the debates of the convention, from contemporaneous history, or from the restrictions imposed by the Constitution upon the exercise of this power, all of which show that rate making was not within the mind of the framers of the Constitution, but shall confine myself to adjudicated cases and recognized rules of construction.

In Gibbons v. Ogden (9 Wheat., 194) it was held, Chief Justice Marshall delivering the opinion of the court, that the word "commerce" as here used "is a unit, every part of which is included by the term." He further said in that opinion:

If this be the admitted meaning of the word in its application to foreign nations, it must carry the same meaning throughout the sentence and remain a unit, unless there be some plain intelligible cause which alters it. * * * It is the power to regulate; that is, to prescribe the rule by which commerce is to be governed.

In that same case Mr. Justice Johnson, concurring, at page 228, says:

The power to regulate foreign commerce is given in the same words, and in the same breath, as it were, with that over the commerce of the States. * * * But the language which grants power as to one description of commerce grants it as to all.

In Brown v. Huston (114 U. S., 630), the court said:

The power to regulate commerce among the several States is granted to Congress in terms as absolute as is the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations.

In the case of Bowman v. Chicago, etc., Railway Company, (125 U. S., p. 482), the Supreme Court said:

The power conferred upon Congress to regulate commerce among the States is, indeed, contained in the same clause of the Constitution which confers upon it power to regulate commerce with foreign nations. The grant is conceived in the same terms and the two powers are undoubtedly of the same class and character and equally extensive.

In the case of Crutcher v. Kentucky (141 U. S., 47), the court said, pp. 57–58:

It has frequently been laid down by this court that the power of Congress over interstate commerce is as absolute as it is over foreign commerce. * * * And the same thing is exactly true with regard to interstate commerce as it is with regard to foreign commerce. No difference is perceivable between the two.

Mr. Justice Field said in Pittsburg, etc., v. Bates (156 U. S., 587):

The power to regulate commerce among the several States was granted to Congress in terms as absolute as is the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations.

These authorities and others that might be cited establish the proposition that the power conferred upon the Congress as to interstate commerce is precisely the same as the power conferred upon Congress as to foreign commerce; neither more nor less.

This power, being identical in both cases, can not include the power to fix rates to be charged for transportation in the one unless also in the other. During the whole period of our country's existence no one down to this moment has ever claimed, or even suggested, either at the bar or on the bench, that it was the intention of the framers of the Constitution to confer on Congress by the commerce clause power to fix rates of compensation for the carriage of passengers or freight in foreign commerce. This is not alone, because the fixing of the carrier's compensation is not an article of commerce to be transported, not an element in the conduct of commerce that affects one way or another the question of safety or convenience in transportation of either life or property, but also because, aside from all questions about treaties and international relations generally, it would be utterly impracticable to exercise such a power with respect to international commerce. Today but little of it is carried in ships of American registry. Less was carried when the Constitution was framed. Then as now the great bulk of international commerce was carried in ships and transports over which we could not have, if we so desired, any control whatever, except only while the same might be in our ports or within our jurisdiction. Whatever we might be able to do as to American ships we could not fix rates for foreign ships. The mere suggestion of the situation as to foreign commerce, how it is carried on, and the impossibility of intelligent action in prescribing rates of charges is enough to show that such an exercise of power was not and could not have been contemplated by the framers of the Constitution when they conferred on Congress the power to regulate foreign commerce.

But if this power was not conferred as to foreign commerce neither was it as to interstate commerce.

POWER OF THE STATES.

The assumption that Congress has the power to fix rates as a part of the power to regulate commerce is largely due to the fact, no doubt, that the States undeniably have this power. But the one does not follow from the other. The cases are wholly different. The States are complete sovereignties, except only as they have delegated their powers to the Federal Government. Among the powers they have reserved is the power to grant franchises to be a corporation. It is in this proprietary power to create corporations and give them authority to conduct a designated public business, such as that of a common carrier, that the power is included to prescribe as one of the terms and conditions of such franchises that the State shall have authority to fix rates and prescribe any terms and conditions it may see fit to impose. This power is unquestioned, because the corporation is the creation of the State. It gets its every right and privilege from the State and must, therefore, accept its life and its powers and rights and privileges, subject to such conditions as the State may see fit to impose.

The Federal Government has this power also with respect to the corporations that it creates, and it has exercised it with respect to the railroad corporations it has chartered; but it does not derive this power from the commerce clause of the Constitution, which is a distinct and substantive power in and of itself, but from its general sovereign powers to promote the public welfare, establish post-roads, and provide for the national defense.

The advocates of rate-making legislation cite decisions of the Supreme Court to the effect that the power to regulate commerce conferred upon Congress by the commerce clause is a complete plenary power. This is true, but the complete power spoken of by the court is the power to regulate. The question remains whether or not within this complete power to regulate is included the power to fix rates of compensation for a carrier to charge for the service he is to render; and for the reason that it is not necessary to the execution of the power "to regulate," which goes properly no further than may be necessary to insure comfort, safety, and uniformity of regulations in the transportation of passengers and property, and because, in the nature of things, such a power can not be exercised and never could be exercised with respect to foreign commerce, it never could have been the intention of the framers of the Constitution that any such power should be conferred.

This does not leave us at the mercy of the carriers.

IN OTHER WORDS, IF IT BE HELD THAT THE CONGRESS HAS NO POWER TO FIX RATES, IT DOES NOT FOLLOW THAT THERE IS NO POWER IN THE GOVERNMENT TO CONTROL CHARGES TO BE MADE FOR THE TRANSPORTATION OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

It does not so follow, because all carriers of interstate commerce, like all other public utilities, are required, in the absence of any statutory provision, simply because of the common-law rule, to charge only reasonable and just rates, and to abstain from the practice of unreasonable discriminations between individual shippers and between independent localities. This rule of the common law has been universally recognized in this country, and has always been enforced in courts of equity when their jurisdiction in such cases has been invoked. If, therefore, there were no legislation on the subject, any shipper who might be charged an excessive rate could either pay and recover back in an action at law, in a law court of proper jurisdiction, or, to avoid a multiplicity of suits, he could exhibit his bill of complaint in a court of equity and secure relief by injunction. These propositions are elementary and do not need a citation of authorities for their support, but the books are full of cases in point.

In the case of Scofield v. Railroad Co. (43 O. S., 571), in a most elaborate and carefully prepared opinion, the court reviews the leading cases on the subject and grants relief by injunction against a discrimination in rates. The discrimination in this case consisted in giving lower rates to the complainant's competitor on the ground that this competitor was entitled to it by reason of the larger shipments it was making.

In the case of C. & O. R. Co. v. The People ex rel., etc. (67 Ill., 11), the court says:

Another perfectly well-settled rule of the common law in regard to common carriers is that they shall not exercise any unjust and injurious discrimination between individuals in their rates of toll.

The supreme court of New Hampshire in McDuffee v. Railroad (57 N. H., 447), says at page 451:

The common and equal right is to reasonable transportation service for a reasonable compensation.

In Railway Co. v. People (56 Ill., 365), the court said:

The carrier is under obligation to receive and carry goods for all persons alike without injurious discrimination as to terms.

In Chicago, etc., R. R. Co. v. Minnesota (134 U. S., 418, 458), the court said:

The question of the reasonableness of a rate of charge for transportation by a railroad company involving, as it does, the element of reasonableness both as regards the company and as regards the public, is eminently a question for judicial investigation, requiring due process of law for its determination.

In Reagan v. Farmers' Loan and Trust Co. (154 U. S.), at page 397, Mr. Justice Brewer, speaking for the court, says:

* * * It has always been recognized that, if a carrier attempted to charge a shipper an unreasonable sum, the courts had jurisdiction to inquire into that matter and to award to the shipper any amount exacted from him in excess of a reasonable rate; and also in a reverse case to render judgment in favor of the carrier for the amount found to be a reasonable charge. The province of the courts is not changed, nor the limit of judicial inquiry altered, because the legislature instead of the carrier prescribes the rates.

In the case of St. Louis and San Francisco Railway v. Gill (156 U. S., 659), the court say:

Mr. Justice Miller, in his concurring opinion, said (in the case of Chicago Railway Company v. Minnesota, 134 U. S., 460): " * * * Until the judiciary has been appealed to to declare the regulation made, whether by the legislature or by the Commission, voidable for unreasonableness, the tariff of rates so fixed is the law of the land and must be submittel to both by the carrier and the parties with whom he deals; that the proper, if not the only, mode of judicial relief against the tariff of rates established by the legislature or by its commission is by a bill in chancery asserting its unreasonable character and its conflict with the Constitution of the United States, and asking a decree of the court forbidding the corporation from exacting such fare as excessive, or establishing its rights to collect the rates as being within the limits of just compensation for the service rendered."

At page 666 of the above-cited case of Railway Company v. Gill (156 U. S.) the court say, again citing Mr. Justice Miller:

That the remedy for a tariff alleged to be unreasonable should be sought in a bill in equity or some equivalent proceeding, wherein the rights of the public, as well as of those of the company complaining, can be protected.

Numerous other citations might be made to show, as these do, that at common law, without any legislation, carriers are bound to transport for all who apply and that they are bound to charge only reasonable and just rates; and that they are not allowed to discriminate between shippers, commodities, or places, and that if they violate any of these duties they are liable for damages, in an action at law, at the suit of the aggrieved party; or he may, to avoid a multiplicity of suits, go into a court of equity and enjoin the carrier from such illegal charges or practices.

The framers of the Constitution did not, therefore, when they conferred on Congress the power to regulate interstate commerce without coupling with it the power to fix rates, leave shippers and travelers at the mercy of the carriers as to rates of charges, discriminations, or other wrongful practices, but, on the contrary, provided for them complete remedies in the system of courts for which they made provision.

BUT IF IT SHOULD BE THAT I AM MISTAKEN IN CLAIMING THAT THE POWER TO FIX RATES IS NOT COMPREHENDED WITHIN THE POWER TO REGULATE INTERSTATE COMMERCE, AND IT BE ASSUMED THAT CONGRESS HAS THE POWER TO FIX THE COMPENSATION OF A CARRIER FOR THE TRANSPORTATION HE SELLS, THEN THE FURTHER QUESTION ARISES, HOW SHALL CONGRESS EXERCISE THAT POWER?

Manifestly it is utterly impossible for Congress by statute to fix all the rates for interstate commerce. It must resort to some plan under which it can avail itself of the help of some kind of board, commission, tribunal, or agency. But when it undertakes to do this it must take heed lest it undertake to do it in such a way as to delegate legislative authority and thus make its effort unconstitutional and unavailing, for it will be conceded that it is unconstitutional for Congress to delegate legislative power.

The chief provision of the Hepburn bill is that if after hearing a complaint the Commission—be of opinion that any rates are unjust or unreasonable, or unjustly discriminatory, or unduly preferential or prejudicial, it shall have power—

to determine and prescribe what will, in its judgment, be the just and reasonable and fairly remunerative rate or rates * * * to be thereafter observed in such case as the maximum to be charged; * * * and to make an order that the carrier shall cease and desist from such violation * * * and shall not thereafter publish, demand, or collect any rate * * * in excess of the maximum rate * * * so prescribed. Such order shall go into effect thirty days after notice to the carrier.

THE FIRST QUESTION RAISED BY THIS PROVISION IS WHETHER OR NOT ALL THREE OF THE POWERS OF GOVERNMENT, LEGISLATIVE, JUDICIAL, AND EXECUTIVE, CAN BE CENTERED AND COMMINGLED IN A POLITICAL BOARD, CLAIMED TO BE ADMINISTRATIVE IN ITS CHARACTER.

This proposed legislation is radically different in this respect from the interstate-commerce act. By that act the Interstate Commerce Commission was empowered to hear complaints as to unreasonable rates, and if upon such hearing it concluded that the rates challenged were unreasonable, it could condemn them and order the railroad to desist from further charging the same; but the Commission had no power to enforce this order, and if the railroad refused to comply with it the only remedy was for the Commission to sue the road in court upon the order, to secure there, by judicial decree, its enforcement.

The hearing of the complaint and the making of a finding and order with respect to a rate were to that extent in the nature of a judicial procedure, but it was not judicial in fact, because the Commission had no authority or power to give effect to its order when it made one. The net result of what it was authorized to do was, to employ the language used in the Minnesota statute hereinafter quoted, to make a recommendation, for that is all its action amounted to. If the road did not see fit to accept the conclusion of the Commission, resort must be had to the courts, where alone judicial power could be exercised.

I mention this with particularity to show that the very able lawyers who, as members of the House of Representatives and the Senate, framed the interstate-commerce act of 1887, carefully avoided conferring on the Interstate Commerce Commission any kind of power except only executive power, for they stopped short of giving it judicial power by refusing to it authority and power to execute its orders and decrees, and they carefully refrained, as the Supreme Court held, from conferring upon it the legislative power of making a new rate to be substituted for a condemned rate. They gave only the one kind of power, because they were familiar with the rule, and by their action showed their respect for it, that two kinds of power, much less three kinds of power, could not be conferred on what they clearly intended should be in legal effect, as well as in practice, only a purely executive or administrative board. This Hepburn bill, however, gives to the Commission the additional power of executing its judgment of condemnation of a rate, which makes the power purely judicial, and then in addition gives to the Commission the power to substitute a new rate for the one it has condemned and put out of existence, which is a purely legislative act.

In addition to these two new powers, judicial and legislative, never heretofore by any act conferred on the Interstate Commerce Commission, it is allowed by this Hepburn bill to retain all the executive power with which it was originally invested, with much more power of that character added.

That the bill is unconstitutional, because of this commingling of all these powers, appears beyond question.

Ours is a constitutional government. It is a fundamental proposition embodied in our organic law that there shall be three separate, independent, and coordinate departments of government, and that there shall not be any commingling of these powers in any one authority. It is, therefore, in contravention of our constitution to confer judicial powers upon the legislative department or to confer legislative powers upon the judicial department or to confer either of these powers upon the executive department.

Mr. Moody, the Attorney-General, in an opinion given to the chairman of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, under date of May 5, 1905, calls attention to the proposition, at page 12 of his opinion, in the following language:

> A case arising under the laws of Kansas signally illustrates the principle that the nature of legislative and judicial powers is such that they can not be joined together and vested in the same body consistently with the theory which underlies the Constitution of the United States and those of many, if not all, the States.

Where the question arises it makes no difference whether the attempt of the legislature is to confer legislative power upon the judiciary or judicial power upon the legislature. The sole question is whether there is power to confer more than one of the powers upon the same body; to commingle them. If it be attempted, the effort is a nullity, because in conflict with the theory which underlies the organic law of our institutions.

In Kilbourn v. Thompson (103 U. S., 190) the Supreme Court said:

> It is believed to be one of the chief merits of the American system of written constitutional law that all the powers intrusted to government, whether State or national, are divided into the three grand departments—the executive, the legislative, and the judicial. That the functions appropriate to each of these branches of government shall be vested in a separate body of public servants, and that the perfection of the system requires that the lines which separate and divide these departments shall be broadly and clearly defined. It is also essential to the successful working of this system that the persons intrusted with power in any one of these branches shall not be permitted to encroach upon the powers confided to the others, but that each shall by the law of its creation be limited to the exercise of the powers appropriate to its own department and no other.

The wisdom of this constitutional provision for the separation of these coordinate powers of government is strikingly manifested by the jumble attempted in this instance. The proposition would be alarming if its utter unconstitutionality were not as apparent as is its unreasonableness. It involves the general supervision by a political board, appointed by the President, of a business so tremendous as to be practically incomprehensible, and so complicated and difficult in its character as to be almost beyond the power of human intellect to master it, with authority to change rates with the stroke of a pen, affecting revenues to the extent of millions of dollars, and to make new regulations of every character affecting the operation of more than 200,000 miles of railways, and affecting also, because of their relation to the railroads and their dependence upon them, almost every other kind of important business conducted throughout the length and breadth of the country; and in this behalf this board, to the judgment of which these vast interests are to be subjected, is authorized to be legislator, prosecutor, judge, jury, and marshal, all combined. In all the legislation of more than a century no such proposition has ever before been successfully presented to the American Congress. It would be an absolute disaster to the country if it should be successfully presented now, were it not that it is impossible for such a measure to receive the sanction of the courts, not alone because of the bad results which would follow from this particular legislation, but also because if such a commingling of power can be sustained as to legislation of this vastly important character it will be a precedent of such commanding force that it will be idle to ever hereafter in connection with legislation talk about three independent and coordinate departments of government, the powers of which are not to be blended and merged. It will be a fitting time, when we vote on this bill, to demonstrate that there are still three departments of government and that they are still, as our fathers intended, separate and independent as well as coordinate.

A SECOND QUESTION, EQUALLY FATAL TO THIS LEGISLATION, AT ONCE ARISES—WHETHER THE PROVISION QUOTED AMOUNTS, IF SUSTAINED, TO A DELEGATION OF LEGISLATIVE POWER.

The power conferred is "to determine and prescribe what will, in its judgment, be the just and reasonable and fairly remunerative rate * * *" and then by proper order put it into operation.

"Just and reasonable and fairly remunerative" are indefinite terms.

Different minds might, and most probably would, reach widely different conclusions as to what they required in almost any given case. All any commission could do would be to act according to its best judgment, and that is just what the bill recognizes and requires, for its requirement is "to determine and prescribe what will, in its judgment, be" the proper rate, etc.

The effect of this provision can not be avoided by a juggle of words intended to show that the Commission does not fix any specific rate and put it into operation, but only that it names a rate which, "in its judgment," is a reasonable and just rate, and thereupon the law operates to give that judgment effect as a maximum rate, for the fact remains that it is the judgment of the Commission and not the judgment of Congress that prescribes the rate, and according to the best authorities that is fatal to the measure.

In Dowling et al. v. Insurance Company, 92 Wisconsin, page 63, a statute was held invalid because in the opinion of the court it delegated legislative power.

The court adopted the rule laid down by Judge Ranney in 1st Ohio State, that the—> true distinction is between the delegation of power to make the law, which necessarily involves a discretion as to what it shall be, and conferring authority or discretion as to its execution, to be exercised under and in pursuance of the law. The first can not be done; to the latter no valid objection can be made.

The statute under consideration in this Wisconsin case provided that the insurance commissioner should—> prepare, approve, and adopt and print the form in blank of a contract or policy of fire insurance, together with such provisions, agreements, or conditions as may be indorsed thereon or added thereto and form a part of such policy and contract, and such form shall, as near as the same can be made applicable, conform to the type and form of the New York standard fire insurance policy, so called and known.

The court held that this was a delegation of legislative power, and that it was therefore unconstitutional and void.

In discussing the question the court said, at page 71:

> The act, in our judgment, wholly fails to provide definitely and clearly what the standard policy should contain, so that it would be put in use as a uniform policy required to take the place of all others, without the determination of the insurance commissioner in respect to matters involving the exercise of a legislative discretion that could not be delegated, and without which the act could not possibly be put in use as an act in conformity to which all fire insurance policies were required to be issued.

It will be noted that the statute, approximately at least, gave a standard by which the insurance commissioner was to be governed in preparing the form of policy to be adopted, for it provided that it should—> as near as the same can be made applicable, conform to the type and form of the New York standard fire-insurance policy.

The court say upon this point:

> Evidently the conformity to "type and form" of the New York standard policy had reference to the form of that policy as embracing the substance of the provisions of the contract, and as to the size and kind of type to be used in printing the policy to be adopted. Had the commissioner wholly declined to prepare, approve, and adopt any form whatever, it would not have been possible to have carried into effect so imperfect or uncertain an enactment, or to transact business under it. Within the lines indicated, a discretion was reposed in the commissioner as to the form of the policy which embodied the substance of the contract, and which was to have the sanction and force of law. The effect clearly was to transfer to him bodily the legislative power of the State on that subject. Within the limits prescribed he was to prepare just such a policy or contract as, in his judgment and discretion, would meet the legal exigencies of the case, and no one could certainly predict what the result of his action might be.

In the case of The State ex rel. Adams v. Burdge and others (95 Wis., p. 390), the question before the court was whether or not a statute which undertook to authorize the State board of health, a purely administrative body, to make such regulations "as may in its judgment be necessary for the protection of the people" from contagious diseases, and give the power to designate what diseases "are dangerous or contagious to the public health," was obnoxious to the objection that it was a delegation of legislative power, and therefore unconstitutional and void, and the court held that it was.

The statute under consideration in this case authorized the board of health to make such regulations "as may, in its judgment, be necessary for the protection of the people" from contagious diseases, and gave them power to designate what diseases were contagious or dangerous to the public health. The court held that this statute was an unwarranted delegation of legislative power.

The court in this case again cites the rule laid down by Judge Ranney as drawing the true distinction between statutes that delegate legislative power and those which do not, and held the statute invalid because on its face it intrusted to the board of health the exercise of its judgment and discretion, which belonged only to the legislature.

In the case of Clark v. Field (143 U. S., 649), and again in the case of Buttfield v. Stranahan (192 U. S., 470)—the tea case—the Supreme Court sustained the statutes there under consideration enacted by Congress, which were attacked on the ground that they delegated legislative power, not by holding that it was competent for the Congress to delegate legislative power, but by so construing the statutes as to show that they did not delegate legislative power; that what the President was authorized to do under the McKinley tariff law was not legislative, but purely administrative, and what the board of experts and the Secretary of the Treasury were required to do, which was under consideration in the tea case, was likewise administrative and not legislative.

The Supreme Court in these cases, recognizing and announcing the rule that legislative power can not be delegated, found that the provisions of the statutes under consideration were such that no legislative discretion was left with the President in the one case or with the board of experts or the Secretary of the Treasury in the other.

In answer we are told by the advocates of this bill of the statutes under which the Postmaster-General and the Secretary of the Interior are invested with authority to decide various questions arising in their respective Departments, according to their judgment and discretion, which have no application whatever to the question under consideration, for the obvious reason that in all those instances the Government is dealing with its own and has a right to do so on its own terms and conditions.

So, too, they have cited as an authority for them what Chief Justice Waite said in the Munn case (94 U. S.), as follows:

> With the fifth amendment in force, Congress, in 1820, conferred power upon the city of Washington to regulate the rates of wharfage at private wharves, the sweeping of chimneys, and to fix the rates of fees therefor, and the weight and quality of bread; and in 1848 to make all necessary regulations respecting hackney carriage and the rates of fare of the same, and the rates of hauling by cartmen, wagoners, carmen, and draymen, and the rates of commission of auctioneers.

And so on, at length.

In citing this as an authority they overlook the fact that the conferring by the legislature of a State upon a municipality of such powers of local government as are enumerated in the statute quoted is an exception to the general rule as to the delegation of legislative authority. Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, sixth edition, page 226, says:

> * * * The legislature can not delegate its power to make laws; but fundamental as this maxim is, it is so qualified by the customs of race and by other maxims which regard local government, that the right of the legislature, in the entire absence of authorization or prohibition, to create town and other inferior municipal organizations, and to confer upon them the powers of local government, and especially of local taxation and the police regulation usual with such corporations, would always pass unchallenged. The legislature in these cases is not regarded as delegating its authority, because the regulation of such local affairs as are commonly left to local boards and officers is not understood to belong properly to the State.

Congress sustains the same relation to the city of Washington that a State does to the municipalities within its borders.

The essence of all these decisions is given in the case of Field v. Clark, page 693, where, as stating the true rule, they quote Judge Ranney, as the Wisconsin cases did, as follows:

> The true distinction is between the delegation of power to make the law, which necessarily involves a discretion as to what it shall be, and conferring authority or discretion as to its execution, to be exercised under and in pursuance of the law. The first can not be done; to the latter no valid objection can be made.

I repeat this quotation to emphasize it.

This rule indicates the distinction running through all the well-considered cases on the subject of the delegation of legislative power. According to this rule the test is whether or not the party on whom the authority is conferred is intrusted with any discretion to make the law; if so, the statute is unconstitutional. If, on the other hand, no discretion be conferred, but only an administrative duty be enjoined, the statute is valid. Discretion may be allowed as to its execution, but none as to what the law shall be.

Applying this rule we see what must be the character of the legislation enacted by Congress conferring the rate-making power on the Interstate Commerce Commission, or any other tribunal, to make it valid, namely, that no discretion to make rates, according to its opinion or judgment, can be conferred, but standards or guides and tests must be prescribed to govern the action of the Commission. To illustrate, Congress may prescribe that rates shall not exceed so much per mile per passenger, or so much per ton per mile for freight, or that on roads making a net earning of so much per mile rates shall not exceed a maximum named, while on roads making less or greater earnings that maximum shall be varied to correspond. In such instances, with such standards by which to be governed, the action of the board of commissioners or the tribunal or agency selected will be purely administrative, because it will have nothing to do in order to arrive at the rate to be fixed beyond making a calculation and working out results and then naming them.

It has been contended that the Supreme Court of the United States has sustained State statutory provisions that did not conform to this rule authorizing State commissions to make rates within the States; and it is further pointed out in support of the right of Congress to confer the rate-making power on the Interstate Commerce Commission, that the Supreme Court in the Maximum Rate case, and in other cases, indulged in expression which indicate, although that question was not before the court, that it would sustain such legislation as is now proposed if it should be enacted.

It is true that the Supreme Court has upheld statutes enacted by the States conferring this power on State commissions or commissioners, and it is true that the Supreme Court did indulge in the Maximum Rate case, and perhaps in other cases, in the character of expressions referred to, but it is also true that the precise question now presented was not presented to the court in any of these cases. And it is also true that the Supreme Court of the United States has never yet upheld a State statute conferring power to make rates on a railroad commission or commissioner as to that particular point which did not make the power so conferred purely administrative in character, or which was not enacted by virtue of a constitutional provision that authorized such legislation.

The leading cases relied upon are what are known as the Granger cases, reported in 94th U. S., the Stone case, the Reagan case, the Minnesota case, and the Maximum Rate case.

The first of the Granger cases was that of Munn v. The State of Illinois, 94 U. S., 113. The question involved in that case was whether or not the legislature of Illinois could fix maximum rates of elevator charges. In that case the legislature had provided that the maximum charge for the storage and handling of grain, etc., should be 2 cents per bushel for the first thirty days, and additional specified charges for longer periods of time.

There was no question in this case as to the power of the legislature to delegate legislative authority.

The next case is that of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company v. The State of Iowa, reported at page 155, 94th U. S. This case arose under "An act to establish reasonable maximum rates of charges for the transportation of freight and passengers on the different roads of Iowa," approved March 23, 1874.

A number of questions were involved in the case, but the particular question under consideration was not and could not have been one of them. The statute is found at page 61, Laws of Iowa, 1874, but the nature of the statute is set forth at page 163 of the opinion of the court, which was delivered by Mr. Chief Justice Waite, as follows:

> The statute divides the railroads of the State into classes, according to business, and establishes a maximum of rates for each of the classes. It operates uniformly on each class and this is all the Constitution requires.

From this statement it appears that the commission provided for by the statute had only the administrative duty to perform of ascertaining to which class a particular railroad belonged and then applying the rates provided for that class. The classification was on the basis of net earnings, and maximum rates were named by the statute for each class on all articles shipped.

All this appears more fully from the following provisions of the statute:

> All railroads in this State shall be classified according to the gross amount of their respective annual earnings within the State, per mile, for the preceding year, as follows: Class "A" shall include all railroads whose gross annual earnings, per mile, shall be four thousand dollars ($4,000) or more. Class "B" shall include all railroads whose gross annual earnings, per mile, shall be three thousand dollars ($3,000) or any sum in excess thereof less than four thousand dollars ($4,000). Class "C" shall include all railroads whose gross annual earnings, per mile, shall be less than three thousand dollars ($3,000).
> SEC. 2. All railroad corporations, according to their classifications as herein prescribed, shall be limited to compensation per mile for the transportation of any person, with ordinary baggage not exceeding one hundred pounds in weight, as follows: Class "A" three cents; class "B," three and one-half cents; class "C," four cents: Provided, That no such corporation shall charge, demand, or receive any greater compensation per mile for the transportation of children twelve years of age or under, than the half rates above prescribed: And provided also, A charge of ten cents may be added to the fare of any passenger, when the same is paid upon the cars, if a ticket might have been procured within a reasonable time before the departure of the train.
> SEC. 3. The tariff rates established in the following schedule shall be considered the basis on which to compute the compensation for transporting freights, goods, merchandise, or property over any line of railroads within this State:

Then follow 14 similar pages of this schedule of tariff rates showing the cost of transportation according to the table given, up to a distance of 376 miles. And then follow many pages, all a part of the statute, on which are set forth a basis for computing the tariff charges on every kind of an article that the legislature could think of as likely to be transported by railroad carriers in the State of Iowa, of which the following is a sample:

CLASSIFICATION OF FREIGHTS.

SEC. 5. The following classification of freights, explanatory of the preceding schedules, shall be taken and held to be the classification in force in this State under the provision[s] of this act:

EXPLANATION OF CHARACTERS.

The class as given opposite each article, 1, 2, 3, 4, stands for first, second, third, and fourth classes, respectively; 1½ for once and a half first class, and D 1 for double first class.

Articles not enumerated will be classed with similar articles.

More might be quoted from this statute to advantage, but the quotations made are sufficient to show its character and that the duties of the officials charged with the execution of the law were purely administrative, involving no discretion whatever.

The next case of this series was that of Peik v. The Chicago and Northwestern Railroad Company, reported at page 164, 94th U. S.

The nature of the statute under which this case arose is shown at page 166, where occurs the following:

> Chapter 273 classifies railroads in the State, fixes the limit of fares for the transportation of any person, classifies freights and the maximum rates therefor, and prescribes certain penalties and forfeitures for receiving any greater rate or compensation for carrying freight or passengers than the act provides. It appoints railroad commissioners and prescribes their duties and powers.

The full text of the statute on this point is as follows:

> SECTION 1. All railroads in the State of Wisconsin are hereby divided into three classes, to be known as Class A, Class B, and Class C. Class A shall include all railroads or parts of railroads in the State of Wisconsin now owned, operated, managed or leased either by the Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company, the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company, or the Western Union Railway Company. Class B shall include all railroads or parts of railroads owned, operated, managed, or leased by the Wisconsin Central Railway Company, the Green Bay and Minnesota Railway Company, or the West Wisconsin Railway Company. Class C shall include all other railroads or parts of railroads in said State.
> SEC. 2. Any individual, company, or corporation owning, operating, managing, or leasing any railroad or part of a railroad in the several classifications, as herein prescribed, shall be limited to a compensation per mile for the transportation of any person with ordinary baggage not exceeding 100 pounds in weight, as follows: Class A, 3 cents; Class B, 3½ cents; Class C, 4 cents: Provided, That no such individual, company, or corporation shall charge, demand, or receive any greater compensation per mile for the transportation of children of the age of 12 years or under than one-half of the rate above prescribed: And provided further, That the rates for transportation herein prescribed may be reduced, as hereinafter provided.
> SEC. 3. All freights hereafter transported upon any railroad or part of a railroad in this State are hereby divided into four general classes, to be designated as first, second, third, and fourth classes, and into seven special classes, to be designated as Class D, E, F, G, H, I, and J. Class D shall comprise all grain in carloads; Class E shall comprise flour in lots of 50 barrels or more, and lime in lots of 24 barrels or more; Class F shall comprise salt in lots of 60 barrels or more, and cement, water lime, and stucco in lots of 24 barrels or more; Class G shall comprise lumber, lath, and shingles in carloads; Class H shall comprise live stock in carloads; Class I shall comprise agricultural implements, furniture, and wagons; Class J shall comprise coal, brick, sand, stone, and heavy fourth-class articles in carloads; and in addition to the several articles in the said special classes shall be added other articles as and in the manner hereinafter prescribed, except into Classes D, E, G, and H; and all articles not above enumerated are (or) subsequently set into said classes, as hereinafter provided, shall be placed in and belong to the four general classes, to be classified by the railroad commissioners hereinafter provided to be appointed, as said articles were classified by the Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway, which classification went into effect on the 15th day of June, 1872.

These quotations are sufficient to show that the Wisconsin statute was, so far as the principle is concerned, modeled after the Iowa statute.

In legal effect they were identical in character, and no question as to the delegation of legislative power was involved in either case, for the legislature had in both instances denied the use of judgment or discretion, and provided a rule which left nothing to be done to ascertain what the rate should be which the Commission was to prescribe, except only to ascertain to what class the road belonged, which was a purely administrative matter. Having ascertained to what class the road belonged, it remained only to apply the rate prescribed by the statute.

In the case of the Railway Co. v. Minnesota (134 U. S., 418), the statute under consideration is printed in the margin of the report of the case and the general nature of it is sufficiently shown by the following provisions:

> That in case the Commission shall at any time find that any part of the tariffs of rates, fares, charges, or classifications so filed and published, as hereinbefore provided, are in any respect unequal or unreasonable, it shall have the power and is hereby authorized and directed to compel any common carrier to change the same and adopt such rate, fare, charge, or classification as said Commission shall declare to be equal and reasonable. To which end the Commission shall, in writing, inform such common carrier in what respect such tariffs of rates, fares, charges, or classifications are unequal and unreasonable, and shall recommend what tariffs shall be substituted therefor.

(f) makes it the duty of the common carrier to publish the rates so recommended and to put them in operation, and the railroad failing to do so, then the Commission shall do so.

(g) provides that—> if any common carrier shall refuse or neglect to carry out such recommendation made and published by such Commission, such common carrier shall be subject to a writ of mandamus, to be issued by any judge of the Supreme Court, or of any of the district courts of this State, upon application of the Commission to compel compliance with the requirements of this section and with the recommendation of the Commision, and failure to comply with the requirements of said writ of mandamus shall be punishable as and for contempt, and the said Commission, as complainants, may also apply to any judge for a writ of injunction against such common carrier from receiving or transporting property or passengers within this State until such common carrier shall have complied with the requirements of this section and the recommendation of said Commission, etc.

In other words, the authority of the Commission was to recommend new rates to be substituted for condemned rates, but it had no power to put such rates into operation except by an appeal to the courts for a mandamus or injunction.

The case of Stone v. The Farmers' Loan and Trust Company (116 U. S., 307), arose under a statute which created a railroad commission and empowered it in certain contingencies to establish, determine, and revise railroad rates and charges, but that statute undertook to make the work of the commission administrative, and perhaps did so, for the language it employed was "in revising or establishing any and every tariff of charges, it shall be the duty of said commission to take into consideration the nature of the services to be performed and the entire business of such railroad, together with its earnings from the passenger and other traffic, and so revise such tariffs as to allow a fair and just return on the value of such railroad, its appurtenances, and equipments."

But whether this language was sufficient to make the work of the commission merely administrative is immaterial so far as the decision of the Supreme Court in that case is concerned, for, assuming that the question was involved in the case, it was not expressly passed on by the Supreme Court of the United States.

The question upon which that case was mainly argued and disposed of was as to whether or not the statute under consideration was in conflict with the charter rights of the railroad company. The supreme court of Mississippi held that it was not, and the Supreme Court of the United States affirmed that opinion, confining itself in its opinion almost exclusively to the discussion of that question. But the Supreme Court of the United States was careful to say in upholding the statute in the last paragraph of the syllabus: "The provisions of the statute of Mississippi of March 11, 1884, creating a railroad commission, are not so inconsistent and uncertain as to necessarily render the entire act void on its face."

Both the supreme court of Mississippi and the Supreme Court of the United States called attention in their opinions to the fact that the statute had not yet gone into operation, and that there might arise questions under it when put into operation that they would not undertake to decide in advance. What all this may have meant we can only conjecture, but it is fair to assume that the very able lawyers who were familiar with that decision, and who framed the constitution of Mississippi, adopted in 1890, deemed it necessary, in order to make such legislation valid beyond question, to provide as they did in that constitution for the creation of a commission, and the conferring upon it by the legislature of the powers which under the statute it was authorized to exercise.

This provision of the constitution of Mississippi is as follows:

SECTION 186. The legislature shall pass laws to prevent abuses, unjust discrimination, and extortion in all charges of express, telephone, sleeping-car, telegraph, and railroad companies, and shall enact laws for the supervision of railroads, express, telephone, telegraph, sleeping-car companies, and other common carriers in this State, by commission or otherwise, and shall provide adequate penalties to the extent, if necessary for that purpose, of forfeiture of their franchises.

Very similar comments can be made as to the Reagan case, reported in 154 U. S., 362.

The case was not disposed of upon a question of delegation of legislative power, but aside from that fact the constitution had been so amended as to authorize the creation of the commission and the exercise by it of the power involved, and for that reason the question, as here presented, could not arise.

The following is the amendment referred to:

CONSTITUTION OF TEXAS.

Amendment of 1890: The legislature shall pass laws to regulate railroad freight and passenger tariffs, to correct abuses, and prevent unjust discrimination and extortion in the rates of freight and passenger tariffs on the different railroads in this State, and enforce the same by adequate penalties, and to (the) further accomplishment of these objects and purposes may provide and establish all requisite means and agencies in this State with such powers as may be deemed adequate and advisable.

In recognition of the fact that general power to make rates can not be conferred on commissions, the different States have been in recent years amending their constitutions so as to give such authority.

The States of California, Illinois, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Texas, Virginia, and Washington have carefully provided in their constitutions that railroad commissions shall be in some cases, and may be in others, created with power to fix rates and prescribe regulations governing railroads operating within their respective territories, or that the legislature may prescribe maximum rates and provide for the enforcement of them, and establish regulations and enforce obedience to them by commissions or such other means or agencies as the legislature may see fit to prescribe.

In some States this has not been done, but no case has yet come to the Supreme Court of the United States involving the right of a State commission to fix rates for roads within the State where such duty has not been made administrative, as in Iowa and Wisconsin, or where the statute has not been, like that in Minnesota, where it only authorized the commission to recommend rates; or where the commission has not been provided for by the constitution of the State, and where it has not been provided by the constitution that such commission when created should exercise the power involved.

When it is remembered that the States, except only as to the powers by them delegated, are complete sovereignties, and when it is remembered that they have complete sovereign power as to rates and railroads within their borders, there can not be any question of the right of the State, acting through its legislature, when all legislative power is conferred upon the legislature, or acting through commissions, where the constitution provides for the creation of a commission and for the exercise by it of legislative power, as in the States of Mississippi, Texas, Louisiana, Virginia, and other States, to make rates, and to prescribe regulations, and to do, generally speaking, all the things they have been authorized in such States to do; but the case is wholly different as to the Federal Government, which has no power, except that which is delegated and such as is necessary to be exercised to give effect to that which is delegated.

The Constitution of the United States expressly provides that all legislative power shall be vested in Congress, and it further provides that the Congress shall have power to regulate interstate commerce. There is here no division of legislative power, nor is there any authority to the Congress to delegate to any commission, board, or tribunal, or agency any part of its legislative power. The legislative power conferred upon Congress can not, therefore, be exercised by any authority except only the Congress itself, and the only question remaining is whether or not the conferring of the power to make rates upon a commission or tribunal is a delegation of that power, and that question must be determined by the terms of the statute conferring the power. If Congress has the power to fix rates, a commission can be created and it can be utilized in the fixing of rates. But it can be utilized only under some such statute as those enacted by the legislatures of Iowa and Wisconsin, when, in 1873 and 1874, they passed their respective statutes, classifying the railroads according to earnings, and providing that the officials chosen to execute them should, by computation, taking the classification as a basis, determine what statutory rates should apply. That was administrative.

The Congress could also utilize the Commission in the fixing of rates if it should see fit to resort to the policy of a mileage basis. But for the Congress to simply declare what is already the law, for it is only declaratory of the rule at common law, that rates shall be reasonable and just, and then create a commission and empower that commission to say what in its judgment a rate shall be, is, most clearly, to confer legislative power, because the rate to be fixed is the law to be enacted, and that is to be determined by the discretion of the Commission instead of the discretion of the Congress. And not only is it a delegation of legislative power, but it is a delegation of all the power the Congress has on the subject, for Congress can not constitutionally make a rate that is not a reasonable and just rate. If extortionate the courts would enjoin at the suit of the shipper, and if confiscatory they would enjoin at the suit of the carrier—in both cases on the ground that property was being taken without due process of law.

BUT IF THIS BILL BE ENACTED AND BE UPHELD, NOTWITHSTANDING THESE OBJECTIONS, THEN ANOTHER SERIOUS LEGAL QUESTION ARISES. BY THE SIXTH PARAGRAPH OF THE NINTH SECTION OF ARTICLE I OF THE CONSTITUTION IT IS PROVIDED THAT "NO PREFERENCE SHALL BE GIVEN BY ANY REGULATION OF COMMERCE OR REVENUE TO THE PORTS OF ONE STATE OVER THOSE OF ANOTHER. * * *"

For many years what are known as differentials have been allowed as between the important Atlantic coast ports of entry. Taking New York as the standard, a differential has been allowed in favor of Philadelphia of 2 cents per hundred weight on all freight for export carried by the railroads to that port, while a differential of 3 cents has been allowed as compared with New York in favor of Baltimore and Newport News, while the same rate is allowed to Boston for export, although the domestic rate ranges from 7 cents, first class, to 2 cents on sixth class, domestic. Still larger differentials have been and are allowed in favor of the ports of New Orleans and Galveston. The fixing of rates being in the hands of the carriers, they have been at liberty to make these differentials by agreement. They had their origin in an endeavor to express, in the differentials agreed upon, the disadvantages of the respective ports of entry as compared with New York. These disadvantages consisted not only of differences in the length of haul, but also differences in the adequacy of the harbors and in the extent to which the respective ports were furnished with shipping facilities and accommodation for ocean carriage. These differentials were the subject of agreement not only on the part of the railroads, but also on the part of the cities named, acting through their respective boards of trade, chambers of commerce, and other commercial bodies and organizations.

These differentials were from the beginning the subject of much dispute and controversy, and much study and labor have been devoted to their equitable adjustment.

As early as January, 1882, Hon. Allen G. Thurman, Hon. E. B. Washburn, and Hon. Thomas M. Cooley were selected by the Trunk Line roads to act as an advisory commission to hear evidence, fully investigate, and make a report as to what differentials should be allowed as between the cities of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore upon freight carried eastwardly from Chicago and common points to these ports and from these ports to Chicago and other western points. They made a very thorough investigation, and wrote a very comprehensive report, which is found at page 1243, volume 2, of the Hearings of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee. Their conclusion is found at page 1268, and I quote from it as follows:

It only remains for us to state that no evidence has been offered before us that the existing differentials are unjust, or that they operate to the prejudice of either of the Atlantic seaboard cities. Differential rates have come into existence under the operation of competitive forces; they bear the same relation to relative distance and relative cost of service; they recognize, as we think, the relative advantages of the several seaports, and they are subordinate to the great principle which compels the carriers of property competing between the same points and offering equal facilities to their customers to make the same rates. We therefore can not advise their being disturbed.

This commission is known as the Thurman Commission. It simply approved and affirmed the differentials already established. These differentials as to these Atlantic seaboard cities were continued until the year 1904, practically without change, although there were some changes in conditions that caused much dissatisfaction with them. Finally this dissatisfaction was expressed by the commercial organizations of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore in an application to the Interstate Commerce Commission "asking that it examine the whole subject of differential rates to and from these four cities, and determine whether the present differentials should be abolished, or, if retained, modified." In response to this application the Commission undertook the work as requested. They made a thorough examination of the whole subject, heard the statements of witnesses, arguments of counsel, and wrote an elaborate report and opinion, published as "No. 746, In the Matter of Differential Freight Rates to and from North Atlantic Ports, Decided April 27, 1905." Their conclusion is found at page 60 of their report and opinion. To state it in a word, they slightly modified the differentials and continued them. In reaching this conclusion they say, at page 62:

* * * a fair differential is one which would give to these several ports the traffic to which they are entitled * * * New York urges that its facilities upon the ocean must not be interfered with, while Baltimore and Philadelphia assert with equal positiveness that they must not be deprived of their advantages upon the land * * *.

The ideal condition would be the establishment of such rates that enterprise at either port in the way of improvement in service or facilities might be rewarded by increased business and that there might exist that healthy struggle of locality against locality which is the best security for proper commercial development. This is justly demanded by the interests of the communities involved.

In disposing of this question the interests of the carriers which serve these communities should be none the less kept in view. If, again, it can be properly done, these rates should be so adjusted that this competitive traffic will be fairly distributed between the different lines of railway which serve these ports. Each one of these four cities is reached by two or more great railway systems. The prosperity of these cities and systems can not be separated. The ability of a railroad to adequately discharge its duty for a reasonable charge depends upon the business which it can obtain, and no one of these systems should be deprived of its fair portion of this enormous export traffic. The purpose of these differentials from the first has been to distribute this business between the different carriers, and we said in our former report that this was not improper unless the means used were improper.

It should be noted that this discussion is confined entirely to the four ports, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore. While others are directly affected by these differentials, they have not been represented upon this hearing, and are not considered, except in so far as it may be necessary to keep in mind the effect of our conclusions here upon conditions elsewhere.

No fact has been more persistently urged upon our attention than the location of Baltimore and Philadelphia, as compared with New York and Boston, in point of distance. Baltimore is 111 miles, and Philadelphia 90 miles, nearer than New York to Chicago. The greater part of the traffic to which these differentials apply does not originate at Chicago, but we have seen that Chicago may be taken as a representative point of origin without injustice to New York. This difference in distance, if there were no competitive conditions, would justify a lower rate to Philadelphia, and a still lower rate to Baltimore.

These differentials have undoubtedly been established in the past with a view almost entirely to their influence upon the movement of export business.

This traffic, in point of fact, originates at a great number of interior points, and reaches numerous foreign destinations, but we may assume, for the purpose of illustration, that it all comes from Chicago and all goes to Liverpool. It is apparent that it may be transported between these points by any of the four ports in question. The distance by rail is somewhat shorter to Baltimore and Philadelphia than to Boston and New York. Upon the other hand, the water distance is somewhat less from Boston and New York than from Philadelphia and Baltimore. The entire through distance does not greatly vary. In other words, this traffic is fairly competitive, and rates ought, therefore, to be so adjusted that rival routes can fairly compete for it.

Apply for a moment the rule suggested by Baltimore and Philadelphia to the movement of this traffic. The domestic rate to Baltimore is 3 cents lower and to Philadelphia 2 cents lower than to New York. The domestic rate to Boston is 2 cents higher than to New York upon low-grade freight, and considerably more upon the higher classes. Now, what would be the result if carriers were compelled to charge their domestic rates upon export traffic? Plainly it would shut up the port of Boston. This fact has been obvious from the first, and it has always been conceded that export rail rates to Boston might be lower than domestic rates and not higher than export rates to New York. * * *

The real question is, on what basis shall rates be equalized through the various ports? New York and Boston insist that the through rates should be made the same in amount by all the ports. The through rate is made by adding together the inland-rail rate from the interior to the port of export and the water rate from the port of export to the foreign destination. These localities contend that if the water rate from a given port is higher, the rail rate to that port may be correspondingly lower, but only sufficiently lower to make the through rate the same. They further contend that water rates are in fact substantially the same from Baltimore and Philadelphia as from Boston and New York, and that therefore the inland-rail rates to those ports should also be the same. Baltimore and Philadelphia urge that there are certain advantages at New York and Boston in the water route which upon the same through rate would attract traffic to those ports at their expense, and they urge that these advantages shall also be equalized so that not the through rate but the advantages of transportation through the several ports shall be made equal. * * * To accomplish this result Boston is allowed to charge a lower export rate than its domestic rate. New York is also permitted, in some instances, to apply a lower differential to export than is fixed for domestic traffic. Now, when New York is allowed to reduce this differential on export traffic there is taken away from Baltimore a part of its natural advantages for the benefit of New York in order that New York may compete for this traffic. But just as Baltimore has an advantage in distance, so New York has certain advantages in ocean facilities. If, now, Baltimore is required to sacrifice its superiority upon the land for the benefit of New York, why should not New York be required to give up some portion of its superiority on the water for the benefit of Baltimore?

We do not wish to be understood as saying that this principle should be extended to the making of rail rates between competing lines. It may be that in such case the rate by every line should be the same, and that each line should sustain whatever disability it has. If in this case it were possible to definitely establish the same through rate by all these ports, if it ever had been possible to do so, the advisability of such an adjustment would deserve serious consideration. It is, however, impossible to apply that rule in fact. The ocean rate from every port is continually fluctuating and is seldom the same for two days in succession. It even varies from hour to hour. The rate may be higher from Baltimore to-day and from New York to-morrow. It can not, therefore, be determined what inland differential would produce equal rates through all the ports.

In view of the fact that Baltimore and Philadelphia have natural advantages in location, that Boston and New York have certain natural advantages in the way of ocean facilities, that it is impossible to make and maintain the same rate through all the ports, we think the true inquiry in adjusting this differential is, what will equalize the advantages of transportation through these various ports. What part of the advantage which Baltimore and Philadelphia enjoy on the score of the inland haul shall they be allowed to retain to compensate them for their disadvantage in the water haul.

The most important factor in determining the route is undoubtedly the rate.

It was said in testimony * * * that a difference of from one-fourth to one-eighth of a cent a bushel will determine the port by which grain shall be exported. Other traffic is not equally sensitive, but it must follow with respect to this low-grade freight that the through rate by all lines should be substantially the same. There are, however, other considerations. The item of insurance, quicker and more reliable service, more frequent sailings, the ability to reach a greater number of ports, superior banking facilities, and better storage facilities all influence the movement of this traffic, and in all these respects New York is superior to its competitors. The elements which enter into the problem are so various and so complex that it is manifestly impossible by any a priori process of reasoning to determine what inland differential will equalize all these advantages and disadvantages.

From the quotations made, and others that might be made, it is clearly shown that the purpose of these differentials is to measure as nearly as may be the respective advantages and disadvantages of the ports of entry named; and what is true as to New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore is equally true as to Newport News, New Orleans, Galveston, and other ports of entry, and the purpose of these differentials has no relation, except indirectly and incidentally, to railroad rates, but have reference solely and directly to their effect on the respective ports of entry.

Railroads are not restrained by any law or constitutional provision from making agreements of this character. That they are of the highest importance not only to the ports with respect to which they are made, but to the whole country, is universally conceded. Without these differentials there would be a natural tendency to concentrate exports at the port having the best harbor and shipping facilities, provided it could be substantially as easily reached by rail from the interior. The differentials are, therefore, essential to the maintenance of the system of diffusion and distribution that is now in force as to our export traffic, and which is of such vast importance not only to the railroads and these different cities, but to the whole country. But to maintain these differentials means that cities are not to have the benefit of their natural advantages, for they are to be offset or overcome by the differences in rates that are agreed upon. In other words, Philadelphia and Baltimore are to be preferred as ports of entry, to the extent of the differentials agreed upon, to New York, and Boston is to be preferred to the extent that she shall have a lower export rate from the inland than her domestic rate, and enough lower to put her on an equality with New York; and this purpose of these differentials is to give the cities they favor a direct preference as to export business to the amount of their respective differentials for the express purpose of putting them on an equality with New York. To withdraw these differentials would be, as the Commission say, to close up the port of Boston. The same remark might be made in such a contingency as to New Orleans and Galveston, to which ports a growing volume of exports has been diverted because of the equality of opportunity for such business secured to them by the differentials they enjoy.

The entire history and purpose of these differentials show that they are not indirect nor incidental preferences for the ports they favor, but that they are direct and intentional for the express purpose of overcoming the results of natural advantages and natural competition. Preferences are their principal purpose, not an incident. The cities themselves recognize this, for it was the cities and not the railroads that asked for the recent hearing before the Interstate Commerce Commissioners, sitting as arbitrators, when they had occasion to deliver the opinion from which I have quoted.

Now, as to the application of all this. If Congress undertake to exercise its power to regulate interstate commerce, it must exercise that power subject to all the restrictions and limitations imposed upon it by the Constitution. It must, therefore, avoid, in the exercise of this power to regulate, coming in conflict with any other constitutional provision that has application to it.

In the case of Pennsylvania v. The Wheeling and Belmont Bridge Co., 18 Howard's Reports, 421, the Supreme Court held that the incidental results of the construction of the bridge at Wheeling, by which interstate commerce on the Ohio River was affected, did not constitute a violation of the constitutional provision above quoted that "No preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another," for the reason that the prohibition applied only to cases of direct preferences. The suggestion of the Attorney-General that these differentials, which have direct reference to the export trade, and, therefore, to the respective points they favor, would be merely incidental to the execution of a law requiring reasonable, just, and impartial rates, is refuted by the facts; and the further suggestion that if the contrary rule be adopted the law now in force must be held to be in violation of this provision does not help the matter. It does not help the matter because under the statute now in force there is no restriction upon the rate-making power, except only that rates in and of themselves, without reference to ports of entry, shall be reasonable and just, and no question of unreasonableness or discrimination has been or can be raised under the law as it now stands.

But, recurring to the original suggestion, it is not an argument to say that differentials would be only a legitimate incident to the making of reasonable, just, and impartial rates. That is mere assertion. Besides it conflicts with one of the great purposes of those seeking the kind of legislation that has been proposed, to secure to each locality its own particular rightful advantages of location, and thus avoid the preferring in the making of rates of one locality to the prejudice of another. That, with discrimination between individual shippers, is the very essence of this entire movement. Unless that purpose be accomplished there will be widespread and positive disappointment among the advocates of such legislation. They commonly denounce the present practice by which localities are denied what they term their rightful advantages, and are put on an equality with other localities that are at a disadvantage as compared with them, as directly and unjustly and grossly discriminatory. The advocates of rate legislation know this and yet they have carefully omitted every provision from the Hepburn bill that has been proposed that would apply to this evil—if it be an evil, as they loudly proclaim.

It seeks thus to avoid the question by entirely ignoring differentials in connection with its expressed purposes. This is open confession that Congress has no power, acting directly by commission or otherwise, to observe these differentials in the making or fixing of rates. Thus the authors of that bill acknowledge that the whole system of differentials is founded on a purpose to give direct preference to the ports respectively favored at the expense of other ports, and, therefore, if done by Congress, in contravention of the constitutional provision under consideration.

But the bill does not escape the trouble by ignoring it. It is rather only another case of the ostrich hiding its head in the sand. If the Commission is to make rates to be substituted for challenged rates that it condemns, the question will at once arise and will have to be met, for with respect to these differentials there is most acute dissatisfaction, and in the very nature of things it must be expected that this dissatisfaction will promptly manifest itself. In such contingency the Commission must act. What its action must of necessity be appears from its opinion already quoted from. It says:

> * * * When New York is allowed to reduce this differential on export traffic there is taken away from Baltimore a part of its natural advantages for the benefit of New York, in order that New York may compete for this traffic. * * *

If this be true, as it is, so, too, is the converse of the proposition equally true. To deny the differential "plainly would shut up the port of Boston."

> "We have endeavored," they say, "to find some fundamental principle by the application of which this dispute might be laid at rest, but entirely without success. * * * There is no just principle which would compel this company (the Pennsylvania), against its will, to apply at New York the same rate as at Philadelphia when the cost of rendering that service is distinctly greater. It might as a matter of competition see fit to do so, but it could not in justice be compelled to."

Again they say:

> If in this case it were possible to definitely establish the same through rate by all these ports, if it ever had been possible to do so, the advisability of such an adjustment would deserve serious consideration. It is, however, impossible to apply that rule in fact.

From these quotations it appears that the Commission clearly understands that the sole purpose of the differentials is to interfere with and affect the results of natural competition, thus directly and intentionally aiding one city to the corresponding prejudice of others. This is something carriers, unrestrained by law, are at liberty to do, and something that is of great advantage to the whole country, but which the Congress is expressly prohibited from doing, because it shall give no preference whatever as between the ports of different States.

But if we invest the Interstate Commerce Commission with the power to make rates it must exercise that power subject to this prohibition of the Constitution that there shall be no preference for the ports of one State over those of another. The whole system of differentials must in consequence be abandoned. As a result each city will then be entitled to its natural advantages, not only of location but of railroad and shipping facilities and every other kind of advantage it may possess. As a practical result New York will at once have over Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Newport News, and all the other competing ports of entry, respectively, the advantages measured by their respective differentials.

The great importance of the observance of this rule is shown by the following statement of the Commission as above quoted. The Commission says:

> The most important factor in determining the route is undoubtedly the rate. * * * A difference of from one-fourth to one-eighth of a cent per bushel will determine the port by which the grain shall be exported.

As a consequence, not only would the port of Boston be closed up, but all the other ports would be at least most seriously affected. The general business that could be taken as well to one port as another under present conditions would then concentrate at the most favored port.

This is not disputed, and can not be, certainly not by the Commission itself, for its own language supports the contention. This is made more plain by Commissioner Clements, who, in his dissenting opinion, speaking to another point, says:

> * * * The facts disclosed do not, in my judgment, justify the conclusions reached, for the reason that I believe they do violence to the great principle of competition, which the Congress and the Supreme Court have so jealously and consistently nourished as one of the fundamental rights of the people. In declaring as between competing lines and competing ports what differentials shall govern, assuming that they will govern, we hamper competition, and by this regulation of distribution effect in reality a division of territory, a division of traffic, and a division of earnings, which in substance and effect tend to defeat, not only the purpose of the antitrust act against the restraint of trade, but the pooling provision of the Interstate Commerce act, with the enforcement of which the Commission is charged.

It follows that the effect of conferring the rate-making power on the Commission will be, in the event of a differential rate being challenged, to raise a question that can not be decided except against the continuance of these differential rates, and, as a consequence, the whole system of differentials as to ports of entry will have to be abandoned. What the effect of this will be can better be imagined than described. That it means disruption of existing conditions with attendant confusion and dissatisfaction so great that it can not well be exaggerated, no one who is informed can doubt.

THROUGH ROUTES AND JOINT RATES.

The Interstate Commerce Act of February 4, 1887, provided for the supervision by the Interstate Commerce Commission of through routes and joint rates, but the provision of that act with respect to through routes and joint rates applied by its terms only to the common carriers "subject to the provisions of the act."

The provisions of that act applied to common carriers "engaged in the transportation of passengers or property wholly by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water when both are used, under a common control, management, or arrangement, for a continuous carriage or shipment, from one State or territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, to any other State or Territory of the United States," etc.

In other words, the provisions of that act as to through routes and joint rates were limited in their application to carriers engaged in transportation wholly by railroad and transportation partly by railroads and partly by water, which carriers were "under a common control, management, or arrangement for a continuous carriage or shipment," etc. The provisions of the statute applied when the carriers, if they were separately owned and entirely distinct from and independent of each other, themselves established a through route and made an agreement as to the terms and conditions upon which freight and passengers should be transported over it. There was no attempt to compel carriers that could not so agree, or, for any reason, would not so agree, to submit to the establishment of through routes and joint rates, and the apportionment of the same by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

But the first section of the Hepburn bill amends the first section of the interstate commerce act of 1887 so as to make it read in this particular as follows:

That the provisions of this act shall apply to any common carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property wholly by railroad (or partly by railroad and partly by water when both are used under a common control, management, or arrangement for a continuous carriage or shipment) from one State or Territory of the United States to another, etc.

The effect of this amendment is to make all its provisions applicable to all railroads without regard to whether they are under a common control, management, or arrangement or not, and to routes made up partly of rail and partly of water transportation only in a certain contingency, namely, when, as under the old statute, they are subject to a common control, management, or arrangement.

The first comment that this provision excites is that there is no uniformity in the operation of the statute upon common carriers engaged in interstate commerce, for it applies in the one case to all railroads without regard to whether there is a common control, management, or arrangement, while as to routes made up of railroad and water transportation the statute applies only when those conditions exist. This is emphasized by the fact that all through water routes for interstate transportation are excluded from the provisions of the statute, such as from Chicago to Cleveland by lake, or from Cincinnati to New Orleans by river, or from Maine to Florida, or New York to Charleston or Savannah, in the coastwise trade, and many other routes of similar character that might be mentioned. They are exempted from the act, notwithstanding rebates and discriminations may be granted and practiced with respect to such shipments as well as with respect to shipments over the routes and by the carriers mentioned in the statutes, and just as harmful in their results as when granted by the railroads.

But the question of uniformity aimed at by the commerce clause of the Constitution in the regulation of interstate commerce, under the provisions of this act, thus indicated, sinks into unimportance, serious as it may be, by comparison with what follows. By one of the provisions of the first section it is made the legal duty of railroads that are not under "a common control, or a common management, or a common arrangement," to "establish through routes and just and reasonable rates applicable thereto."

Through routes are desirable, and as a rule they are now everywhere established and being operated by agreement of the railroads, but there are some instances where through routes have not been established and for the reason that the roads have been unable to agree among themselves as to the apportionment of rates or the other terms and conditions under which there should be a mutual use of their tracks.

To meet such cases the second paragraph of section 15 of the interstate-commerce act is to be amended by section 4 of the Hepburn Act, so as to read as follows:

The Commission may also, after hearing on a complaint, establish through routes and joint rates as the maximum to be charged and prescribe the division of such rates as hereinbefore provided, and the terms and conditions under which such through routes shall be operated, when that may be necessary to give effect to any provision of this act and the carriers complained of have refused or neglected to voluntarily establish such through routes and joint rates, provided no reasonable or satisfactory through route exists.

The provision, by reason of the amendment of section 1, already pointed out, applies to all railroads without regard to whether they have any interest in common or not, and by the terms of this clause the provision applies when the "carriers complained of have refused or neglected to voluntarily establish such through routes and joint rates." In other words, it is proposed by this provision of the Hepburn bill to compel independent railroads that have no relation to each other, except possibly a physical connection, to enter into an agreement for an exchange of business and to pass all their cars over the lines of each other upon such joint rates as the Commission may establish and upon such apportionment of the same as the Commission may determine and upon such other "terms and conditions as the Commission may prescribe." The effect of this provision is to compel railroads that are unable to agree to submit in all such cases to whatever arrangement the Commission may see fit to prescribe.

To illustrate, suppose a railroad originating in Ohio or some other State, building eastward and desiring a trunk line into New York should tap the Pennsylvania road at Pittsburg or some other place and demand an agreement as to through rates on terms the Pennsylvania could not and would not accept. It might well be that the Pennsylvania, an old and expensive road, especially on account of her terminals in the great cities of the East, and particularly in New York, where they have cost hundreds of millions of dollars, would demand, as only fair and equitable, a greater proportion of the joint through rate than the connecting road would be willing or able to allow. Thereupon this road would make its complaint to the Commission and the Commission on hearing would say, "It is made the duty of connecting roads to make through routes and joint rates. It is so provided in the first section of the Hepburn Act. You have neglected or refused to come to an agreement. We therefore make one for you. Whether your business is such on your own lines as to enable you to accommodate the cars and trains of the connecting road or not, we compel you to accept the same and pass them over your lines, and we fix the joint rate and your share of it at so much and the other terms and conditions necessary to be observed for this mutual interchange of business in the operation of the two roads are as follows." They order accordingly, and that is the end of it if this provision be constitutional.

What is thus done in the one case may be done in two, or a dozen, or a score, or a hundred other cases as to that same road if it is unable to agree with connecting lines seeking to use its tracks for through business. Thus it will come to pass that connecting lines wanting to have through trunk lines will see that it is unnecessary to go to the trouble and expense of building them, because they can appropriate, to the extent necessary, the Pennsylvania, or the Baltimore and Ohio, or the New York Central, or, going westward, the Union Pacific, or Southern Pacific, or Northern Pacific, or any other trunk line.

What it is thus proposed to do can be done, and done legitimately, but it can not be done in the way provided in this bill. What this bill thus provides for is a taking of private property for public use, and although that property, if you take again the Pennsylvania road for illustration, is already subject to a public use, it may be put to an additional public use, namely, a use by the connecting carrier or carriers to the extent indicated, but private property taken for a public use, although it may be a railroad already devoted to public use, can not be taken without making just compensation. The ascertainment of what is just compensation in such a case is like the ascertainment of what is just compensation in any other case, a purely judicial function that can not be exercised by a board, but only by the courts. In determining what is just compensation in such a case not only must rates of fare and the apportionment of the same be considered, but the franchises and every other element of value that may be taken or affected must be taken into the account.

Congress has no power to dispossess the courts of their jurisdiction to fix this compensation, neither can Congress prescribe a rule by which the compensation shall be ascertained. All this is settled in the case of Monongahela Navigation Co. v. The United States (148 U. S., p. 312).

I read as follows from page 327:

By this legislation Congress seems to have assumed the right to determine what shall be a measure of compensation. But this is a judicial and not a legislative question. The legislature may determine what private property is needed for public purposes—that is a question of a political and legislative character; but when the taking has been ordered, then the question of compensation is judicial. It does not rest with the public—taking the property, through Congress or the legislature, its representative—to say what compensation shall be paid, or even what shall be the rule of compensation. The Constitution has declared that just compensation shall be paid, and the ascertainment of that is a judicial inquiry. In Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge (11 Pet., 420, 571) Mr. Justice McLean, in his opinion, referring to a provision for compensation, found in the charter of the Warren Bridge, uses this language: "They (the legislature) provide that the new company shall pay annually to the college, in behalf of the old one, one hundred pounds. By this provision it appears that the legislature has undertaken to do what a jury of the country only could constitutionally do—assess the amount of compensation to which the complainants are entitled." See also the following authorities: Commonwealth v. Pittsburg and Connellsville Railroad (58 Penn. St., 26, 50); Penn. Railroad v. Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, 60 Maryland, 263; Isom v. Mississippi Central Railroad (36 Mississippi, 300).

In the last of these cases, and on page 315, will be found these observations of the court: "The right of the legislature of the State, by law, to apply the property of the citizen to the public use, and then to constitute itself the judge in its own case, to determine what is the 'just compensation' it ought to pay therefor, or how much benefit it has conferred upon the citizen by thus taking his property without his consent, or to extinguish any part of such 'compensation' by prospective conjectural advantage, or in any manner interfere with the just powers and province of courts and juries in administering right and justice, can not for a moment be admitted or tolerated under our Constitution. If anything can be clear and undeniable, upon principles of natural justice or constitutional law, it seems that this must be so."

We are not, therefore, concluded by the declaration in the act that the franchise to collect tolls is not to be considered in estimating the sum to be paid for the property.

The case is precisely in point. The Monongahela Navigation Company was a company incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania for a public service, and the Congress undertook in authorizing its condemnation for another public use to prescribe the rule that should be followed in ascertaining and fixing just compensation and undertook to eliminate from such compensation the franchise that belonged to the corporation. The Supreme Court held, as we have seen, that this could not be done. Every question passed on in the Monongahela case would arise the very moment the Commission would undertake to establish a through route and to fix the joint rates and other terms and conditions upon which the through route so established should be operated, and there is no room for doubt as to how the courts would decide.

THE BILL ELIMINATES JURIES IN CASES WHERE THE PARTIES ARE ENTITLED TO THEM.

Section 5 of the Hepburn bill purports to amend section 16 of the Interstate Commerce Act as amended March 2, 1889. It would be more correct to have provided that what is set out in section 5 should be a substitute for section 16, because of the great dissimilarity not only in language but also in legal effect between section 16, as it now stands, of the interstate commerce act and the section as it will read if amended as proposed. Section 16 of the interstate commerce act as amended March 2, 1889, authorizes the Commission, or any party interested in any order the Commission has made under the provisions of that act, to apply by petition to the circuit court of the United States, sitting in equity, to enforce such order on complaint that the same is being violated, and the court may, in ordering compliance, make also an order for the payment by the carrier of such sum of money not exceeding $500 per day for each day that the carrier shall fail to obey its order of injunction or other process. This is in the nature of a fine for contempt, and therefore clearly within the power of the court to impose.

Controversies requiring a trial by jury are especially exempted from the operation of this provision of the existing statute.

As to controversies requiring a trial by jury a special provision is made whereby that constitutional right is carefully protected and preserved to each and every party to such proceeding.

Section 5 of the Hepburn bill amends this section so as to eliminate trial by jury altogether. The provision of this amendment is that if "the Commission shall determine that any party complainant is entitled to an award of damages, * * * the Commission shall make an order directing the carrier to pay the complainant the sum to which he is entitled on or before a day named." That is simple, straightforward, and easily understood, but without precedent in legal proceedings.

The amendment further provides, referring to these awards, that "If a carrier does not comply with an order for the payment of money within the time limit in such order, the complainant * * * may file in the circuit court of the United States for the district in which he resides * * * a petition setting forth briefly the causes for which he claims damages, and the order of the Commission in the premises. Such suit shall proceed in all respects like other civil suits for damages, except that on the trial of such suit the findings and order of the Commission shall be prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated, and except that the petitioner shall not be liable for costs in the circuit court, nor for costs at any subsequent stage of the proceedings, unless they accrue upon his appeal. If the petitioner shall finally prevail he shall be allowed a reasonable attorney's fee, to be taxed and collected as a part of the costs of the suit * * * In such suits all parties in whose favor the Commission may have made an award for damages by a single order may be joined as plaintiffs, and all of the carriers parties to such an order awarding such damages may be joined as defendants, and such suit may be maintained by such joint plaintiffs and against such joint defendants in any district where any one of such joint plaintiffs could maintain such suit against any one of such joint defendants; * * * In case of such joint suit recovery, if any, may be by judgment in favor of any one of such plaintiffs, against the defendant found to be liable to such plaintiff."

It can not be claimed for the framers of this provision that they overlooked the fact that under the seventh amendment to the Constitution, in any action brought to recover money, if the amount involved be more than $20, the parties are entitled to a trial by jury, for the provision of law now in force, which they were amending, was framed with careful reference to that fact and so as to preserve that right. It would seem, therefore, that they have intentionally framed this section in plain disregard of that constitutional provision, for surely the character of action provided for is one in which a jury trial must be allowed if the amount involved be large enough to meet the constitutional requirement in that respect, and either party to the action may so demand a jury. This provision would therefore be unconstitutional if these contemplated actions for which provision is thus made involved only one complainant and one defendant, but the section expressly provides that "in such suits all parties in whose favor the Commission may have made an award for damages by a single order may be joined as plaintiffs and all of the carriers parties to such order awarding such damages may be joined as defendants, and such suit may be maintained by such joint plaintiffs and against such joint defendants," etc.

This provision is of such character that it is not unreasonable to suppose that whenever such an order is made there are likely to be a number in most cases, perhaps, a great number of shippers in whose favor an award is made, and this award may be made under this order not against one carrier alone, but against a number of carriers. The statute by this provision clearly contemplates that there may be numerous parties in whose favor such an award may be made, and that each order making such awards may run against a number of carriers.

In the nature of things the awards thus allowed by the Commission would not be the same to each shipper or the same against each carrier. All men do not necessarily ship the same commodities or the same amounts of a particular commodity. One man ships one kind of freight and another something else. The damages for which the award provided by this section is to be made will vary in amount. Perhaps no two shippers out of twenty, fifty or one hundred will receive an award exactly equal in amount to that of any other shipper provided for in the award. Under the same order, as the statute contemplates, one man's award may be against one particular carrier, and another man's award against another particular carrier, and so on indefinitely. Each man's award will, however, be his own individual claim, in his separate and individual right, as against the carrier or carriers named in the order. In other words, each individual shipper who is named in such an award will have a separate and independent right of action against the carrier or carriers damaging him, as named in the order.

Assuming now that an award order has been made, and that the carriers refuse to pay, and a suit is brought. There may be in the case 10, 20, 50, or even 100, or perhaps more complainants in whose favor these varying but separate and independent awards are made by the order, and there may be two, a half dozen, or even a dozen carriers named as defendants. Manifestly a jury trial would be impracticable and impossible in such a case. Perhaps that is the reason why the framers of this bill eliminated that Constitutional requirement by making no provision for its observance, but that does not change the fact that the bill in this particular is a grotesque absurdity, to enact which would discredit the intelligence of the Congress.

PENALTIES.

There are many other provisions of this bill that might be justly and severely criticised, but I have called attention to enough to warrant the conclusion that if it should be passed there will be many orders made affecting the rights of carriers, especially under section 15, as this act proposes to amend it, of the interstate commerce act, which seeks to empower the Interstate Commerce Commission to change rates and establish through routes, which the carriers will desire to litigate.

What the Commission regarded as a slight and reasonable change of rates in the Maximum Rate Case amounted to a difference in revenue to the railroads of $3,000,000 per annum. The change in rates made by the Commission in the Dressed Meats and Packing House Products case amounted during a few months, for which a computation was made, to a difference in revenue to the railroads of almost $2,000,000, and so it is likely to be in every change of rates that the Commission may make that there will be, aside from all other considerations, a large amount of money involved, to the surrender of which the carriers may feel they have no right to submit without an appeal to the courts, but in no such case can they appeal to the court under the provisions of the bill as it passed the House without subjecting themselves to the following provision as to penalties:

> Any carrier, any officer, representative, or agent of a carrier, or any receiver, trustee, lessee, or agent of either of them, who knowingly fails or neglects to obey any order made under the provisions of section fifteen of this act, shall forfeit to the United States the sum of five thousand dollars for each offense. Every distinct violation shall be a separate offense, and in case of a continuing violation each day shall be deemed a separate offense.

If an order be made that a carrier shall charge only a certain rate for the transportation of a certain article between given points, every charge of a different rate for such transportation will be a separate offense. There may be, therefore, many offenses for each day that the order is not observed. There will surely be as many as there are shipments charged for at a rate other than that fixed by the Commission. And there will be as many more as there are officers, agents, etc., of the carrier participating in the offense. Upon this theory the result to the railroad would be as many penalties of $5,000 each as there were shipments at rates other than those prescribed by the Commission, increased by the number of officers, agents, etc., participating in the offense. There might be ten or twenty or a hundred of these offenses, or even thousands, in a single day. On top of all this, in case of a continuing violation, there is to be for each day an additional $5,000. It has been claimed that the entire penalty in case of a continuing violation is to be only $5,000 a day. The language employed does not admit of this construction. But assuming that this construction is correct, then the penalty prescribed would be $5,000 per day, or at the rate of $150,000 per month.

It is fair to presume that any such litigation as a carrier would be required to resort to for protection against an order it might deem unreasonable and unjust would extend over a period of months if not years. During all such period this penalty would be piling up against it, to be paid by it in the event of a final decision upholding the order of the Commission, for while the court might have power to suspend the payments of these penalties thus imposed from day to day during the litigation, it would not have power to grant relief from the cumulative obligation in the event it should be decided that the railroad had without just cause contested the validity of the Commission's order, for in that event the restraining order would have been wrongfully issued. When it is considered that this penalty is to run against the carrier and against every officer, agent, or employee of the carrier who knowingly fails or neglects to obey any such order it is apparent that the penalties thus prescribed are of such extreme, cumulative, and burdensome character as to deter a carrier from resorting to the courts, except only where either the case is entirely clear as to its final outcome or the consequences of an obeyance of the order are of such bankrupting character as to make it impossible, with due regard for the rights of its creditors and stockholders, for it to submit.

In the case of Cotting v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co., 183 U. S., 79, the court, although finding it unnecessary to decide the point, took occasion to discuss the effect of cumulative and burdensome penalties upon the rights of parties to appeal to the courts. At page 100, Mr. Justice Brewer said, after speaking of the character of penalties under consideration in that case:

> In this feature of the case we are brought face to face with a question which legislation of other States is presenting. Do the laws secure to an individual an equal protection when he is allowed to come into court and make his claim or defense subject to the condition that upon a failure to make good that claim or defense the penalty for such failure either appropriates all his property or subjects him to extravagant and unreasonable loss? Let us make some illustrations to suggest the scope of this thought.
> Suppose a law were passed that if any laboring man should bring or defend an action and fail in his claim or defense, either in whole or in part, he should in the one instance forfeit to the defendant half of the amount of his claim, and in the other be punished by a fine equal to half of the recovery against him, and that such a law, by its terms, applied only to laboring men, would there be the slightest hesitation in holding that the laborer was denied the equal protection of the laws? The mere fact that the courts are open to hear his claim of defense is not sufficient if upon him and upon him alone there is visited a substantial penalty for a failure to make good his entire claim or defense. Take another illustration: Suppose a statute that every corporation failing to establish its entire claim, or make good its entire defense, should, as a penalty therefor, forfeit its corporate franchise, and that no penalty of any kind, except the matter of costs was attached to like failures of other litigants, could it be said that the corporations received the equal protection of the laws? Take still another illustration: Suppose a law which, while opening the doors of the courts to all litigants, provided that a failure of any plaintiff or defendant to make good his entire claim or entire defense should subject him to a forfeiture of all his property or to some other great penalty; then, even if, as all litigants were treated alike, it could be said that there was equal protection of the laws, would not such burden upon all be adjudged a denial of due process of law?
> Of course, these are extreme illustrations, and they serve only to illustrate the proposition that a statute (although in terms opening the doors of the courts to a particular litigant) which places upon him as a penalty for a failure to make good his claim or defense a burden so great as to practically intimidate him from asserting that which he believes to be his rights is, when no such penalty is inflicted upon others, tantamount to a denial of equal protection of the laws. It may be said that these illustrations are not pertinent because they are of civil actions, whereas this statute makes certain conduct by the Stock Yards Company a criminal offense, and simply imposes punishment for such offense; that it is within the competency of the legislature to prescribe the penalties for all offenses, either those existing at common law or those created by statute; and, further, that although the penalties herein imposed may be large, yet obedience to a statute like this can only be secured by large penalties; for otherwise the company, being wealthy and powerful, might defiantly disregard its mandates, trusting to the manifold chances of litigation to prevent any serious loss from disobedience. A penalty of a dollar on a large corporation, whose assets amount to millions, would not be very deterrent from disobedience. It is doubtless true that the State may impose penalties such as will tend to compel obedience to its mandates by all, individuals or corporations, and if extreme and cumulative penalties are imposed only after there has been a final determination of the validity of the statute, the question would be very different from that here presented. But when the legislature, in an effort to prevent any inquiry of the validity of a particular statute, so burdens any challenge thereof in the courts that the party affected is necessarily constrained to submit rather than take the chances of the penalties imposed, then it becomes a serious question whether the party is not deprived of the equal protection of the laws.

This language, so employed by Mr. Justice Brewer, might well have been uttered with special reference to this penalty provision of the Hepburn bill. The penalty is large; it is cumulative; it is burdensome. No railroad can afford to run the risk of it, except only in desperate cases that compel a choice between evils, and manifestly the provision was made, to quote the language of Mr. Justice Brewer, "in an effort to prevent any inquiry of the validity of this particular statute." Such a provision is wholly different from one imposing a burdensome and cumulative penalty for the continuing violation of a statute after its validity has been upheld in the courts. If this provision is to remain in the bill in the form in which it is expressed, it should be amended by the addition of a proviso that in the event of an appeal to the courts there should be an absolute suspension of the penalties during the full period that any order of such suspension may be in force while the litigation is in progress; otherwise the courts will no doubt hold it invalid.

THE BILL DOES NOT PROVIDE FOR ANY PROPER REVIEW BY THE COURTS.

Many other objections and imperfections might be pointed out, but enough have been mentioned to show why the framers of this bill should seek by the terms of it to prohibit a full review by the courts of the orders and proceedings of the Commission, except only as to whether they have been "regularly made," which means nothing more than a review of the question in any given case, whether an order of the Commission condemning a rate and fixing another to take its place has been made in conformity with the proceedings and requirements of the statute, not whether the rate condemned was or the rate substituted is reasonable or just or fairly remunerative as the bill allows and requires.

The points mentioned are sufficient, however, to show that if by any possibility this bill should be both passed and upheld by the courts, the powers conferred by it upon the Commission are so vast that there is a special reason in that fact alone for subjecting the exercise of them to the most careful scrutiny and review by the judicial department of the Government, not only on behalf of the railroads, but also on behalf of the shippers.

Fortunately some of the most important of the questions to which attention has been called can not be withheld from the courts. But the power to review the question as to whether a rate condemned or a rate made by the Commission in a given case is reasonable is, unfortunately, not one of these. The making of a rate is a legislative act, and legislative discretion of the Commission in determining what is a reasonable rate can not be interfered with by the courts in the absence of special statutory authority, unless the rate be fixed so high that it is extortionate to the shipper, or so low that it is confiscatory as to the carrier. There is some room for a difference of opinion, because of some of the expressions of the courts in some of the cases as to what will be regarded as extortion on the one hand, or confiscation on the other, but none as to the general rule.

But between extortion on the one hand, and confiscation on the other, there is, in most cases, a considerable latitude within which the action of the Commission, without special statutory provision for review of it by the courts, would be final and conclusive.

In a given case a dollar might be a point at which a rate would become extortionate, and 60 cents a point at which it would become confiscatory. A rate anywhere between these figures would be, in a legal sense, reasonable, and beyond the power of the courts, without special statutory provision, to review it, because it expressed the legislative will. If the rate were fixed at 90 cents it might yield a net revenue to the carrier of 6 per cent; if fixed at 80 cents a net revenue of 4 per cent; if fixed at 70 cents a net revenue of 2 per cent; if fixed at 60 cents no revenue at all.

Even 6 per cent might be, under certain circumstances, an unreasonably low return for the carrier. Much more might this be true as to 4 per cent or 2 per cent, and yet as the bill is framed the courts are denied jurisdiction to review all such questions, and in this denial there is strong probability, if not absolute certainty, that great and irreparable wrong may be done.

But this denial extends also to the action of the Commission in condemning the original rate, which is a purely judicial function, and without which precedent judicial action the legislative action of fixing a new rate can not be had. Whatever may be said as to the propriety of investing the court with jurisdiction to review the legislative act of fixing a new rate, it is difficult to perceive how there can be any difference of opinion as to the propriety of the courts having power to review the judicial act of denouncing and setting aside the old rate. But the bill denies this power by the restriction of the review to the question of "regularity," for the Federal courts, unlike the courts of the States, are not courts of general jurisdiction, but courts that have only the power and jurisdiction conferred by the Constitution, and such additional power and jurisdiction as may be expressly conferred by statute.

This same denial extends to orders as to rules and regulations of every character that the Commission may prescribe, and the same kind of objection to such restriction may be made.

Why should this jurisdiction be withheld from the courts? Who distrusts them? Only violators of the law have ever had occasion to fear the justice they administer.

They have been from the beginning of the common law the sure bulwark of the liberties and rights of the Anglo-Saxon race.

Unmoved by passion, prejudice, or public clamor, they have ever been the conservative, steadying, reassuring factor in American Government.

Why should the advocates of this measure, affecting as it does the highest interests of the American people, seek to exclude them from their appropriate participation in the determination of the great questions that such legislation is sure to precipitate? That there is this unwillingness to allow the courts an unrestricted review is enough not only to excite distrust of this measure, but to condemn it.

All this is intensified by the fact that in the law as it now stands there is a complete provision for this review, as well as for the protection of the right of trial by jury.

Section 16 of the interstate commerce act, as it now stands, provides that whenever any common carrier shall fail to obey any "lawful" order of the Commission, "not founded upon a controversy requiring a trial by jury," it shall be lawful for the Commission, or any person interested, to apply to the court to enforce such order, and the court shall have power to hear and determine the matter "speedily as a court of equity" * * * "in such manner as to do justice in the premises; and to this end such court shall have power * * * to make all such inquiries as the court may think needful to enable it to form a just judgment, * * * and if it be made to appear to such court * * * that the lawful order * * * drawn in question has been violated or disobeyed, it shall be lawful for the court to enforce it," etc.

Aside from all legal questions involved, there is just ground for questioning the wisdom of conferring upon a statutory board appointed by the President, such autocratic powers as this bill confers upon the Commission with respect to such tremendously important interests. But it becomes alarming when it is seriously proposed in the form of a bill that has already, with practical unanimity, passed one House of Congress, to exclude from review and supervision and control by the courts the exercise of that power, except only to the extent of inquiring and determining whether or not the proceedings under the statute have been regular. Thoughtful men may well take fright when they recall that these powers are to be given to a commission to be thus exercised without supervision or control, which, according to the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, has erroneously decided almost every important case upon which it has passed judgment during the whole period of the nineteen years of its existence.

To the long list of such reversals another was added on last Monday, when the Supreme Court reversed the Interstate Commerce Commission in the Fruit Growers' case. That case strikingly illustrates both the unwisdom and the injustice of conferring upon the Interstate Commerce Commission powers that are not to be supervised by the courts.

The question in the case was whether the shipper or the initial road should determine the routing of fruit shipped from California to eastern cities.

The testimony showed conclusively—in fact, there was no contention to the contrary—that the shipper insisted upon routing his fruit shipments so that he might secure rebates from the eastern connections of the initial California road.

These rebates were of large amounts, aggregating, for the next four years preceding 1900, to one of the complainants alone $175,000.

The roads took the routing into their own hands to break up this practice of rebating, and the Interstate Commerce Commission held against the right of the roads to do this. The effect of their decision, if allowed to stand, was to restore the wholesale practice that had previously been indulged in of granting rebates, or the encouragement of the most serious complaint that has ever been made against the railroads. If the Supreme Court had not had power to review and reverse, that decision would have stood, to the great detriment of all the interests involved and to the constant encouragement of a violation of the interstate-commerce act.

But, passing all that by, there is no necessity for any such legislation.

Under the Elkins law, if enforced, all kinds of rebates and discriminations as to both persons and places can be broken up and prohibited as nearly as any kind of offense against the law can be suppressed; but, if it were otherwise, this law would not help matters, but only make them worse.

It does not profess to deal with rebates or to prevent carriers engaging in other kinds of business, and has not one line in it that affords any remedy whatever against these, the greatest and most serious and most complained-of evils of all that have been mentioned.

It does not undertake to meet the demand, whether well or ill founded, for uniform classification; neither does it undertake to deal with the "relation of rates" or discrimination as to localities.

The House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in its report on this bill said with respect to it:

> This bill does not attempt to give power to the Commission to readjust classifications of freight.
> As but little complaint has been made to the committee concerning classification, it was not deemed wise at this time to suggest new legislation upon that subject. So, too, with the question of the relation of rates. The committee has not deemed it wise at this time to suggest new legislation to change existing law upon that subject. It is one of very great importance—interesting, however, as a rule—to certain particular communities rather than to the public at large. It involves conflicts between towns and cities rather than the public generally, and it relates more to the building up of certain local interests of a local nature rather than to the interests of the people of the whole country. Therefore we thought best not to hamper or hinder the subjects of the bill by adding to them those other less urgent considerations.

In this heartless way are dismissed the appeals for relief that have been coming up to the American Congress for the last twelve months from hundreds of places which, like Cincinnati, have been claiming that they are unjustly discriminated against.

No wonder the committee felt constrained in concluding its report to say that—

> No member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce believes that the provisions of this bill will be satisfactory to all persons who may be affected by it, nor that it will be satisfactory even to those who desire legislation upon the lines of the bill.

And yet this bill, thus confessedly unsatisfactory to every member of the House committee and probably to every member of the House of Representatives, passed the House without amendment, because, as the newspapers announced, "the order had gone forth" that, while there might be debate, no amendment—no matter how necessary it might appear—should be allowed. The bill came to the Senate, and, so far as the committee is concerned, there has been a repetition of that experience. No matter what may be its defects and no matter what this, that, or the other Senator may think, not an "i" shall be dotted nor a "t" shall be crossed of all this important measure. To even suggest that the bill is filled with unconstitutional provisions or that it will prove impracticable in operation is heralded as a species of treason and disloyalty—to whom or to what nobody knows. The whole proceeding is without a precedent in my experience as a member of this body and probably without a precedent in the history of the nation. If we are to abdicate our functions and permit such an imperfect, ill-advised, and ill-considered bill to become a law, discredit will attach and disappointment will follow, not only to "those who desire such legislation," as the House committee suggested, but to all the people of the whole country.

It will prove thus disappointing because if it does not fail and perish in the courts, experience will shortly demonstrate the utter impracticability of satisfactory rate making by a commission.

Approximate successes in small areas, if there are any such precedents, do not afford a safe guide for the vast field presented by the whole country, embracing every section and presenting every possible complication and difficulty that can be involved in railroad operation.

These roads with their innumerable ramifications spread over the whole country, penetrating every section, crossing and recrossing each other at all important points, and wherever they cross or come in contact, and in some cases where they are thousands of miles apart or even run in opposite directions, they are in sharp competition with each other.

As a result of it all rates are adjusted with such nicety that the gross revenues of the roads are so closely calculated to meet interest, dividend, and operating expenses that a reduction of 1 mill on the cost of transporting a ton of freight per mile would so reduce the aggregate as to make it impossible for the roads to pay one dollar of dividends on their stock; and a further reduction of 1½ mills per ton per mile would make it impossible to pay one dollar of intrest on their bonded obligations.

We should hesitate to disturb such conditions.

The answer made to this suggestion is that the Commission will have so little rate-making power that no harm can result from its exercise. If there be but little, then there must be but little necessity. But the difficulty seems to lie in the fact, not fully and properly appreciated, that rates are so interwoven and interdependent that it is impossible to disturb one without affecting many, and that since there will be no mode of relief afforded under this bill except through maximum rate making, if we give such an invitation for them as this bill amounts to, there are likely to be the most serious disturbances resulting from the exercise of this power. It matters not that the Commission, as it has been contended, will consider only one rate at a time. If it should make a change in that rate all other rates in any manner dependent upon it would have to be correspondingly changed.

A change of rates on the products of the cotton mills of New England to Chicago and western points would necessitate a corresponding change of rates on the products of the cotton mills of the South to the same points, for they are all adjusted with reference to each other.

A change in the rates on coal and iron from Pennsylvania and West Virginia to northern and western points would necessitate corresponding changes on coal and iron from all points in the South to the same markets.

A change of rates on lumber from Michigan and the Northwest to the prairies of Nebraska and other States would necessitate a corresponding change not only in the rates from the lumber States of the South, but also on lumber from the far distant Pacific coast States.

A change in the rates on cotton from Memphis over the short haul across the country to the cotton mills of Georgia and the Carolinas would necessitate a corresponding change in the rates on cotton over the long haul from Memphis north and east, through Cincinnati, to the cotton mills of New England. Otherwise the roads that carry for the cotton mills of New England would lose their cotton business to the roads that carry to the cotton mills of the South, or lose it to the Mississippi River and the roads that compete with that highway to New Orleans and the other ports of the South.

Ocean transportation in the coastwise trade compels low rates over the Atlantic Coast Line to the principal points of the South. This compels the Seaboard Air Line, which parallels, to give like low rates or lose its business to the Coast Line; and the Southern Railway must meet this competition or lose its business to its competitors, and so on indefinitely. In other words, the rates over all these roads from these great cities of the North to all these great cities of the South are dependent one upon the other, and all are governed by water transportation and the conditions of nature, which constitute a power greater than the railroads, greater than the Congress, greater than any earthly power.

To touch the rates on any one of these lines is to touch the rates on all of them.

To touch the rate on any one commodity on any one of these lines is to touch the rates for that commodity over all these lines.

To touch the export rates over the lines from the Missouri and Mississippi valleys to New York and other North Atlantic ports is to touch the rates from the same points of origination over the lines to New Orleans and Galveston and other Southern ports, for they all have carefully adjusted relations to each other.

"The opening of new mines, the building of new factories, the starting of new furnaces and mills and shops, the building of new roads, the location and development of new settlements and towns and cities, the constant fluctuations of the markets at home and abroad, peace and war, droughts and floods, long and short crops, famine, pestilence, and the plague, all, whether occurring in Europe, Asia, Africa, South or North America, affect supplies, influence markets, and control the prices of transportation."

Illustrations and suggestions might be multiplied indefinitely, but enough has been said to show that it is idle to talk about the "restricted" exercise of the power of rate making, which it is proposed to confer on the Commission. No such thing is possible. It is as broad as the dependence of rates on each other and as difficult as the laws and forces of trade and commerce, and broader by far and more difficult than it is possible for any commission to deal with.

This work is done to-day by thousands of expert rate makers scattered throughout the country, familiar by long experience with the business, familiar with local conditions, and familiar with the requirements of changes in conditions as from time to time they suddenly come to pass. They may not be doing their work perfectly. Nobody claims they are. No human effort can be perfect, but they are doing this work better than it is possible for any commission to do it that we may create. All these considerations impel me irresistibly to the conclusion, irrevocable in the absence of new light, that it will be a serious mistake to enact this measure.

Many other objections might be urged, but time and strength forbid pursuing the subject further for the present, so I hasten to conclude.

What, then, are we to do? The answer is plain. We can accomplish everything desired by simply amending the Elkins law so as to broaden and strengthen it and make it more available.

This is easily done. An amendment making such provision will be offered at the proper time. I shall try to find opportunity to speak upon it then at such length as may be necessary to fully explain it. For the present it is enough to say that the purpose of this amendment will be not only to preserve the benefits of this salutary law, but to make them available, for every kind of case that can possibly arise, to the humblest shipper in all the land. This may be done by extending the provisions of the third section of the Elkins law to excessive rates, and by making it specifically applicable to every kind of rebates and discriminations as to both persons and places, and by making it the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission not to act as judges, and legislators, and prosecutors, and sheriffs, but to address themselves to the purely executive duties of hearing complaints, exercising their powers of conciliation, and, where these powers fail and they find there is probable cause, sending the case at once, through the Attorney-General, to the proper court for immediate proceeding, in the name of the Government, for the benefit of all parties interested, without expense to the shipper.

The great difficulty shippers have had in the enforcement of their rights against the railroads has been that no shipper single handed and alone can, as a rule, afford to resort to the law with a railroad for his antagonist. The disadvantage is too great on many accounts, and particularly because the shipper is likely to be subjected to an expense he should not be required to bear; but if he can invoke the protection of the courts in the name of the Government, and without expense to himself, he will not fear to assert his rights, and if the railroad knows that it is charging him an unjust rate, or subjecting him to an unlawful discrimination, and that if it does not desist from such practice it will be called to account in the courts, where it will have the Government for prosecutor, it will in most if not in all cases make haste to agree with him.

I regret that it has seemed necessary for me to so long detain the Senate. There is much more I would say if it were not that I fear I would overtax your patience. I reserve all that for some future opportunity, and content myself for this occasion with the addition of a word somewhat personal.

It is not either easy or agreeable to differ with the President. He is the head for the time being, not only of the nation, but also of the political party of which I am proud to be a member. I believe that the welfare of the nation is most beneficially affected and promoted by the supremacy of Republican policies, and on this account think every man who believes in the policies of that party should do all in his power to secure harmony of purpose and unity of action among its members with respect to national affairs. In this behalf he should be willing to make concessions in minor matters; but when questions arise of such commanding importance as those now under consideration it is the duty of every man who has an official responsibility to discharge with respect to them to make careful investigation and then act in accordance with the convictions he may reach as a result. To the best of my ability I have done that.

I dislike exceedingly, as every other public man does, to be arraigned before the country by unfriendly critics as prompted by unworthy motives in the attitude assumed, and to suffer in consequence in the esteem of the people. It is far pleasanter to go with the tide of public sentiment and enjoy the benefits of harmonious relations with coworkers in the public service and have the acclaim instead of the disapprobation of constituents; but no man who allows himself to be controlled against his judgment, by considerations of this character, can do his duty, or maintain his self-respect, or be entitled to retain the respect and confidence of his colleagues and constituents. If we enact this measure and it proves disappointing, as I believe it will, the people will not hear us to say in our defense that we legislated in response to their demands. They expect their representatives, especially in this body, with respect to questions of this character, to act intelligently, patriotically, and in accordance with their judgment and their oath of office which binds them to disregard public clamor and legislate for the public welfare as they see and understand it. We owe it to ourselves, as well as our constituents, to meet this just expectation.

During the delivery of Mr. FORAKER's speech,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Ohio suspend for a moment? The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. House bill 12707—the "statehood bill," so called.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside until the Senator from Ohio shall have concluded his remarks.

Mr. FORAKER. I am much obliged to the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ARKANSAS RIVER BRIDGE.

After the conclusion of Mr. FORAKER's speech,

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13308) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at Pine Bluff. It is a small bill that will provoke no discussion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, may I ask what the request is?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas has asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bridge bill, which is being read for the information of the Senate. Upon the completion of the reading the question will be whether consent shall be given.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will give consent.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I will state that it is a House bill which passed the House, and it is pending here.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill which has just been read?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have no objection. I intend to consent to its consideration; but when I requested that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside it was until the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] should conclude his remarks. That is the way the RECORD now has it. Therefore, in order that the Senator may have his bill passed, I again request that the unfinished business shall be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill which has just been read?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SCHOOL LAND AT ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Will the Senator from Indiana yield to me to call up a bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business, at the request of the Senator from Indiana, has been temporarily laid aside.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Then I ask leave to call up the bill (S. 1726) making provision for conveying, in fee, the piece or strip of ground in St. Augustine, Fla., known as "The Lines," for school purposes.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WESTERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. LATIMER. I ask leave to call up the bill (S. 395) to provide for the appointment of a district judge for the western judicial district of South Carolina, and for other purposes.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask unanimous consent to call up the joint resolution which I introduced yesterday for the extension of the tribal relations of the Five Civilized Tribes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read for the information of the Senate:

The Secretary read the joint resolution (S. R. 37) extending the tribal relations and government of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be read.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understand the Senator from Minnesota desires to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert the words which he sends to the desk.

Mr. TELLER. Let it be read.

Mr. CLAPP. I prepared it very hastily.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That the tribal relations of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole tribes or nations shall continue unaffected until all property of such tribes or the proceeds thereof shall be distributed among the individual members of said tribes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That presents, as I hear it read, an altogether different question and condition of affairs from the joint resolution which was introduced by the Senator from Rhode Island. It seems to me that it ought to be considered, and there ought to be given a little time to consider it.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be read again.

Mr. TELLER. Let us have it read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again read.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That the tribal relations of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole tribes or nations of Indians in the Indian Territory shall continue until all property of such tribes or the proceeds thereof shall be distributed among the individual members of said tribes.

Mr. BAILEY. Does not the Senator want to say "the tribal existence?"

Mr. CLAPP. I was going to state to the clerks that it should read as follows:

That the tribal existence and tribal relations of the tribes—

Reciting their names—

shall continue unaffected until all property of such tribes or the proceeds thereof shall be distributed among the individual members of said tribes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Perhaps the Senator who offered this substitute can relieve my mind by explaining the difference between his resolution and the one introduced yesterday, and the different purposes that may be sought by it.

Mr. CLAPP. I will state the principal difference. As I recall the one of yesterday, it sought to continue the government of these nations. There is a vast difference between that organization which the Federal Government recognizes as the government of these tribes and the tribal existence and the relation of the tribes themselves. For instance, in many States, as in my own State, there are Indian tribes where the tribal relation and tribal existence continue, but they do not have governments which this Government recognizes.

The difficulty in the Indian Territory is that these tribes have had governments which are recognized. The objection to the continuation of those relations is very serious on the part of the Department, as it would seriously interfere with the working out of the processes for the settlement of their affairs.

Those tribes have recognized for years that their tribal government will cease. They have become, in a measure, reconciled to that condition. Now, to turn back the wheel and continue those governments would result in very serious objection, it seems to me, and such is the view of the Department.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator permit a question? Would not the effect of the Senator's amendment be to take all the line from the Indian Territory which we now have in relation to those governments and center all power in relation to them, in regard to their property, in regard to their personal rights, in regard to their tribal relations, in the hands of a single Department of the Government?

Mr. CLAPP. Under the form of the resolution, as I first had it, that, perhaps, would be true. Under the form we have it now, it leaves the whole matter in Congress, to be disposed of as we see fit from time to time.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly there should be some head or some guiding hand upon the line. If it be not in the Indian tribes there or in Congress here it must be in the Secretary of the Interior. It should not be left in the air. I understand, just from hearing the resolution of the Senator read, that the effect of it would be to put all this matter directly under the control of a single man, to wit, the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CLAPP. Not in the form of this resolution. It leaves it with Congress to deal with just as we see fit.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.

Mr. McCUMBER. Just for a question. I was out when the resolution was read. Does it continue both the government and the tribe?

Mr. CLAPP. It does not.

Mr. McCUMBER. It simply continues the tribal relation?

Mr. CLAPP. It provides that the tribal existence and the tribal relation shall continue unaffected until all the property of such tribes shall be distributed.

Mr. McCUMBER. What objection would the Senator have to also continuing in the same resolution the present governments until otherwise provided by law? Then you continue the matter and keep it in status quo, exactly the same as it is at the present time. Can there be any serious objection to that?

Mr. CLAPP. The objection to that largely is that those tribes have been brought to feel for years that their tribal governments would cease. There is a vast difference there between the government of each of those tribes, as we have recognized it, and the tribal relation and tribal existence.

Mr. McCUMBER. But, if the Senator will permit me, they have also been brought to believe their tribal relations would be discontinued on the 4th day of March. So the one is as broad as the other.

Mr. CLAPP. No.

Mr. LONG. From what source have they a right to believe that that would be done?

Mr. McCUMBER. As to the tribal relations?

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Because the discontinuance of the government as understood by them and, I think, as understood by everyone—I will differentiate in the case of the Senator—was to the effect that the dissolution of the government meant the dissolution of the tribe.

Mr. LONG. There are provisions in the bill now pending for the continuance of the tribal relations, for making a definite and complete roll of each tribe, which shall govern in the distribution of the tribal property.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; but that is not continuing the government. That is simply continuing the persons who before had something to do with the government in certain positions for the purpose of carrying out some new provision. It is creating a certain office, if I may say, that is purely a Federal office, and for the purpose of signing papers.

Mr. LONG. The Senator has reference to the government.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator will permit me, the whole purpose of that is simply to insure the proper distribution of the property.

Mr. McCUMBER. Nothing more.

Mr. BAILEY. That is all. The tribal relations there are practically destroyed to-day. The Indians are on their separate allotments, to which they either already have a deed or to which they are now entitled to receive a deed. They have no longer any tribal court. They still have a tribal government, but after the 4th day of March they resort to the courts of the United States to assert their rights or to protect their rights. Therefore there is nothing but what the Senator from Kansas [Mr. LONG] himself described yesterday as the shell of a government there.

Mr. LONG. That is all.

Mr. BAILEY. Now, I want to state to the Senator the purpose I have in this, and I make no concealment of it. I am trying to prevent the railroad from obtaining that land.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think we all agree with the Senator on that.

Mr. BAILEY. I am sure of that. I am not so sure, however, that any of us can accomplish the result which we all desire unless the improvidence of a former Congress was protected by that proviso, which seems to have been inserted as a sober second thought, and to stipulate that this grant shall not become effective until the land becomes the public land of the United States.

I do not know enough about the public-land laws of this country, I do not know enough about the public-land decisions of our courts, to know precisely when land does become public land. It happens that the whole, or practically the whole, of my professional life has been spent in a State that had no acre of United States public land, and I never had a lawsuit in my life which involved that question in any way. Therefore I do not pretend to know when land does become public land, but I do know that if it is ever allowed to become public land this grant attaches, and nothing we can do can defeat it.

The condition of the grant to the Chickasaws and Choctaws is that it will inure—I think I quote the exact words—"to them and their descendants so long as they exist as a tribe and occupy it."

Mr. McCUMBER. "As a nation," which means "a tribe."

Mr. BAILEY. I thought the very words were "as a tribe." That is my recollection of it. I remember once having read the deed, and I think it declares "as a tribe." But whether it be tribe or nation, the condition upon which that title fails is when they cease to be a tribe or nation. It is not important within that grant that they should continue a government, but that they shall continue a tribe; and what I insist upon here is that this resolution shall continue the tribal existence.

I agree with the Senator from North Dakota and the Senator from Wyoming (and I tender my apology to the Senator from Minnesota for having intervened), that they ought to continue their tribal government so as to prevent either a lapse of all government or a devolution of the government of those 80,000 people upon the Secretary of the Interior.

There was a proposition presented this morning by the Senator having charge of the bill to do that. I protest against any man in this country being made the government of 80,000 people, even if they are Indians. That is a little too much authority to confer upon any man. If the Secretary of the Interior were as wise and as just as he was yesterday described to be by my friend from Wisconsin, I would not agree to confer upon him that extraordinary power. But even if I could consent to confer such a power upon anybody, the present Secretary of the Interior is the last man of my acquaintance upon whom I would consent to confer it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I made the suggestion of the continuance of the government because of the seeming objection on the part of a few Senators that it would place the matter of government wholly in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior. I will admit that there is nothing but the shell of a government left. That being so, we are committing no error, we are doing at least no harm, if we continue not the old government that existed some years ago, but the mere shell of the government as it exists now. I do not understand that there is much of a shell left in the matter of a government. I do not understand that they are performing any legislative or any executive or judicial functions among the Indian tribes. So, practically, there is no government left. If some one takes the position that there is a government there at the present time which is doing the work that otherwise would devolve upon the Secretary of the Interior, then I have no objection, and I can not see that anyone else should have objection to the continuance of such authority if it exists.

But I wish to call the Senator's attention to the other proposition he makes, and that is the question as to when this becomes public land. In construing any section of an act or in construing the act itself it should always be construed for the purpose of effectuating its purpose. Therefore the words "public land" as used in one instrument might have a restricted construction, and as used in another instrument a very broad construction.

Now, what was the purpose of the act? The act itself is practically an agreement. The United States said through Congress to a certain railway company, "If you will build a certain railway in a certain territory you shall have every odd section of land for a distance of 10 miles on each side of the center line of your track." Now, there is a contract.

The Government also, to guard itself, uses this language in substance: "This land has already been granted to a tribe, the title to vest in such tribe or nation so long as it exists as a nation." Therefore, so long as that tribe exists as a nation it will have the right of occupancy; when it ceases to exist the Government will reinvest itself with that title. But the Government of the United States reserves to itself the right to sell or dispose of that property in any way before the tribe becomes extinguished. What does the railroad understand by that contract, and what would the courts say was understood by that contract? I think any court would have to construe that contract to mean that it was the intent of both parties to the contract that as soon as the title of the tribe became extinguished, it not having been disposed of before that time, it would revert to the Government of the United States, and would therefore become public land—that is, land of the United States.

Now, can we go further and say that the railway company understood the Government to mean that there must be something else than a reversion to the Government of the United States; that there must be, in addition thereto, an executive order on the part of the Government placing that land open to settlement? I do not believe that public land, as used in that connection and to effectuate that particular purpose, will ever be construed to mean that it is conditioned not only upon the Government becoming the owner in fee again, but also upon the further condition that it shall make an executive order thereon and open to settlement; that if it does that, then the title of the railroad accrues. If it does not do it, then the railway company shall have no title. That would be against the spirit of the law itself. Therefore I think we should construe the words "public lands" simply to be lands of the Government of the United States which may be thrown open for a public purpose, and not which must necessarily as a condition precedent be thrown open for public purposes before the right of the railway can attach.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I disclaimed any knowledge of the public land laws or decisions. I did that because I did not wish to be understood as asserting any opinion; but I am by no means sure that, entirely without reference to what may be public lands or what may not be public lands, the provision here is a provision that these lands shall become public lands before the railroad grant attaches. The words may be read to mean that whenever this title is extinguished, by treaty or otherwise, the lands become public lands under this act.

The proviso is a short one, and it could easily have been expressed without any ambiguity. It looks to me like an afterthought; but, at any rate, it runs:

Provided, That said lands become a part of the public lands of the United States.

That might mean that that proviso was a condition upon which, and only upon which, the grant should take effect following the other conditions, that the tribal title should be extinguished; or it might have meant—and there is strong reason for thinking it does mean—simply and only that when the tribal title was extinguished by treaty or otherwise the railroad grant vested, coupled with the condition, not that the lands which the railroad would obtain should be public lands of the United States, but that all tribal lands of the Indians whose titles should be extinguished should become public lands of the United States, and that from those public lands the railroad could select its alternate sections with indemnity according to other public land grants. In other words, that proviso may be construed merely as defining the character of all tribal lands whose title has been extinguished and not as a condition precedent to the railroad grant.

I express no opinion as to whether it means the one or the other. I hope it means that they must become public lands before the railroad grant attaches. If it does not, I very seriously doubt if anything which this Congress can do can ultimately defeat the claim of the railroads to those lands.

Those lands are probably worth to-day $90,000 to the mile, a sum sufficient to discharge the enormous debt of the M., K. & T. Railroad—for that is what it is, it being the successor of the road to which the grant was made—enough to discharge that enormous amount of bonded indebtedness and declare a dividend of 100 per cent upon its stock. Of course when the grant was made the land was probably worth only 10 or 15 cents an acre, but in the course of time it has increased, so that if the grant is now made, it will be worth not less than $90,000 to the mile. I do not believe that the Government of the United States can grant a qualified fee to A, retaining the reversion, and then after granting that reversion to B can enter into an arrangement with A which practically continues that qualified fee forever and thus defeating the revisionary right of B. A reversion is as much a vested interest in the land as the Indians' fee, and if it be true that that proviso is not a condition precedent to the taking effect of the grant, then there is no law Congress can pass, in my judgment, which can prevent the railroad from recovering that land.

Mr. CLAPP. I think the Senator is right about that.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think that is the same position that the committee has taken. I think we are all agreed in the desire to protect the Indians if we can do so.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, there is not any necessity just now for the dissolution of the Indian government in the Indian country. It may not be the best government that could be established there, but it has been in existence for a long time. While I understand there has been complaint of some irregularity of conduct on the part of members of the council by way of increasing fees, or something of that kind, it is a mere bagatelle which amounts to nothing compared with the amount of money at stake with reference to the lands we are now dealing with. It would be very much better indefinitely and for all time to continue the government that exists there than it would be to take the chance of allowing these lands to be absorbed by the railroad company.

We have a mere chance, Mr. President, in my opinion, to get rid of the effect of this land grant, but we certainly will not do so, in my opinion, if the tribal relation ceases. There is not a lawyer anywhere who will controvert the proposition that the title vests in the sovereign—that is, in this case, the United States. It has been the law for thousands of years in every civilized country in the world that the title to vacant, unappropriated lands without an owner should vest in the crown. It was so under the Roman law when Rome had a king, and it was so in the government after Rome ceased to have a king. In England the title to such lands vests in the crown. That has been the law of the world, as I have said. There must be somebody to own the land now in question when the Indian tribes cease to exist.

We can make it possible to get rid of this land honestly and properly, without any evasion, provided we keep the title where it is now. We do not ask to put it anywhere else; but to leave it where it is, and leave it where it was when they took this grant.

Mr. President, there is not any excuse why anybody should stand here and deny that these Indians should have the benefit of this extension. It is in the interest of the Indians, and it is not in the interest of anybody else. I do not care what the objection to it may be at the Department——

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. TELLER. In a moment. I do not care what the objection may be. They may not want to be bothered with that government down there, but they ought to be bothered with it, and we ought to be bothered with it, for we have passed unconsidered and hasty legislation with reference to these matters and we are not discharging our duty as a trustee for these Indians.

I am going to insist, if I can do so, Mr. President, with no prospect of this bill passing in time to save that title in the tribes, that we must have this matter disposed of before any other business is done in this Senate.

Mr. CLAPP. Does the Senator prefer Senate joint resolution 37?

Mr. TELLER. I do not care what the resolution may be. The only objection to the joint resolution is that it merely extends the time two months.

Mr. ALDRICH. Three months.

Mr. TELLER. Well, three months. That is not long enough. We ought to extend it until we can have another session of Congress and until we can fully consider this question. I defy any man to show that any interest of the public or of the Indians will suffer by such an extension.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. TELLER. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask the Senator if he has any objection to supporting the joint resolution if it be amended so as to provide for the continuation of the tribal relations until otherwise provided by law?

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator from Colorado will permit me, I will suggest that we change the word "relations" to "existence," change "June" to "March," and also change "six" to "seven;" so as to read:

That the tribal existence and government of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole tribes or nations are hereby continued in full force and effect for all purposes until the 4th day of March, A. D. 1907, etc.

Mr. TELLER. I am entirely willing to agree to that.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let there be inserted the words "unless otherwise provided by law."

Mr. BAILEY. "Until otherwise provided." Then we can deal with it.

Mr. TELLER. I am entirely content. I only want something done in this matter.

Mr. CLAPP. I call for a vote on the joint resolution. I should like to get action upon it.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, only a word.

Mr. CLAPP. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SPOONER. I have been very much interested in this legislation so far as it involves protection of the Indian lands from this railroad grant. I am not a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, but I should like, before this matter passes and while it is being considered, to bring to the attention of the Senate a blunder—an obvious blunder—in the patent, and also another historical fact, which ought to be in the RECORD, and which, I think, makes it less dangerous to the Indians than would seem to be true if there had been no error in the patent.

The treaty, in language as clear as it is possible for anything to be expressed, not only guaranteed, but solemnly pledged the seven millions and seven additional millions, to the Cherokee Indians forever. That was the treaty. In 1830 Congress provided for a patent. There is a provision as to a reverter in the act of May 28, 1830, chapter 148 of the laws of 1830:

That in the making of any such exchange or exchanges—

This related to the whole subject of moving the Indians beyond the Mississippi River and exchanging the lands they left for lands west of the river.

That in the making of any such exchange or exchanges it shall and may be lawful for the President solemnly to assure the tribe or nation—

Using the words as synonymous—with which the exchange is made that the United States will forever secure and guaranty them, and their heirs or successors, the country so exchanged with them, and, if they prefer it, that the United States will cause a patent or grant to be made and executed to them for the same.

Well, they did prefer it, and it was under the provision of this act of 1830 that the patent was executed. The patent prescribed the conditions which I read to the Senate yesterday—but the proviso of the act of 1830, to which the patent refers, is this:

Provided always, That such lands shall revert to the United States if the Indians become extinct or abandon the same.

That is, abandon the lands. The patent says:

Therefore, in execution of the agreements and stipulations contained in the said several treaties, the United States have given and granted, and by these presents do give and grant, unto the said Cherokee Nation, the two tracts of land, so surveyed and hereinbefore described, containing in the whole fourteen millions three hundred and seventy-four thousand one hundred and thirty-five acres and fourteen hundredths of an acre, to have and to hold the same, together with all the rights, privileges, and appurtenances thereto belonging to the said Cherokee Nation forever—

Subject to this proviso—

And subject also to the condition provided by the act of Congress of the 28th of May, 1830, referred to in the above-recited third article, and which condition is that the lands hereby granted shall revert to the United States if the said Cherokee Nation becomes extinct, or abandons the same.

It might make a very great difference——

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. In the Senator's opinion, which would control—the treaty or the patent?

Mr. SPOONER. The law and the treaty are alike.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand; but the patent is the instrument by which the Indians acquired the title.

Mr. SPOONER. No.

Mr. BAILEY. Suppose I make a contract with the Senator from Wisconsin to convey him land upon certain conditions, but when I come to execute the deed, the deed does not follow the contract. The Senator acquires his title through the deed, and he might have a cause of action against me, because I made a deed contrary to the contract; but whoever became entitled under his deed would acquire all the rights that he acquired, and no more, I think. The trouble here, to my mind, is that we are dealing with this land according to the conveyance and not according to the contract under which it was conveyed.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, that would be so under ordinary circumstances, and perhaps it is so now; I am not expressing a definite opinion as to that; but I am putting in the RECORD, for use hereafter, what is the discrepancy between the act under which this patent was executed by the executive officers of the Government and the patent itself. The condition of reverter fixed by the act of 1830 was not the dissolution of the Cherokee Nation or the extinction of the Cherokee Nation as a nation, but the extinction of the Indians—the Cherokee Indians or their abandonment of the lands.

Now, you have the grant in the treaty of the 7,000,000 acres and the 7,000,000 additional, which were guaranteed by the Government, to be vested in the Indians and their heirs forever.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator a question right there?

Mr. SPOONER. In a moment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Just a brief question.

Mr. SPOONER. Very well.

Mr. McCUMBER. Suppose there were but two Indians left of the tribe, would the Senator think that the treaty was intended to convey the 14,000,000 acres to be held by those two Indians?

Mr. SPOONER. I am getting at the law and not the result of it. The patent made a departure from the act, and could not operate to minimize the title which the Indians had. The patent was only evidence of title. The patent conveyed the same land that the treaty described.

Mr. BAILEY. The treaty did not convey to the Indians and the act did not convey to the Indians any more than a contract could convey to an individual.

Mr. SPOONER. But the treaty was a contract for conveyance.

Mr. BAILEY. I want to say that I asked the Senator his opinion, not for the purpose of suggesting the doubt which I did suggest, but in the hope that he would say that the rule applying to a great public transaction like this is not precisely the rule that would obtain between individuals, and that, inasmuch as the railroad or any other grantee taking under a patent which referred to the law or to the treaty, would be charged with notice of the whole transaction. I think that is the better rule.

Mr. SPOONER. The railroad company would be charged with notice of this act of Congress.

Mr. BAILEY. I think so.

Mr. SPOONER. The railroad company and every citizen of the United States would be charged with notice that the act of Congress had made this reverter to depend upon the extinction of the Indians, but whether our wards would be charged with that notice or not is another thing. But one thing seems to be very clear, Mr. President, and that is the mistake of the executive department in the drafting of this patent could not be operative to diminish or narrow the real title which the act of Congress, as well as the treaty, intended to vest in those Indians.

There is another thing I want to say about that, and I do not pretend to have definite opinions regarding it. The whole thing is intricate and troublesome. There was suggested yesterday afternoon by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] a construction of section 9, which is entitled to great consideration, especially in view of this history and of the blunder in this patent:

That the same grants of lands through said Indian Territory are hereby made as provided in the first section of this act whenever the Indian title shall be extinguished by treaty or otherwise.

Now, we know the duration of the Indian title by the treaty. It was not to be a base fee.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the Senator mistakes the fee that I described as a base fee. That is not the fee of the Cherokees, but of the Chickasaws and Choctaws, which is different.

Mr. SPOONER. Very good; but we have under the treaty a conveyance forever by the Government, or a contract to convey forever by the Government 7,000,000 acres and 7,000,000 additional to the Cherokees. We have a provision in the treaty entitling them to a patent for these same lands if they wish it. The patent would be evidence of title at least, and perhaps more, but to the same lands. There is only one possible contingency in which the Government in that situation would have contemplated the restoration of those lands to the public domain or a grant or a bestowal of those lands upon the railway company, and that would be, of course, after the Indian title had ceased to exist; and so they say here:

Whenever the Indian title shall be extinguished by treaty or otherwise.

If extinguished by treaty, it would be extinguished by consent of the Indians, and the suggestion of the Senator from Utah was that the word "otherwise," used in connection with the word "treaty," under the doctrine of noscitur ex sociis, might very well be construed to mean some other means, such as the purchase by the Government independent of treaty or some other method involving the consent of the Indians. Certainly no court, I think, would say, taking the whole history of this business, that Congress ever intended to deprive these Indians of this land, granted forever, without their consent, unless the Indians themselves became extinct and incapacitated from giving consent.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to ask the Senator if it is possible that a patent could be of any force unless it was authorized by law?

Mr. SPOONER. The patent might be of force as a conveyance, but if the proviso did not conform to the statute it would be void.

Mr. PETTUS. Would it not necessarily be void——

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. PETTUS. If the officer who made the patent did not have any authority to make it—unless it conformed to the law?

Mr. SPOONER. He had no authority to change the phraseology of that condition at all.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I interrupt my colleague to ask a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the senior Senator from Wisconsin yield to the junior Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Would not the court reform that patent?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly; and the evidence would be the statute and the patent. The Government could now issue a new patent in accordance with the act of 1830.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, these grants are different. Some of them were in fee simple; some were not, and I doubt if any one of them can be described by any language the writers on real estate law have ever used, because the same rules that apply to contracts between two citizens will not always apply between the Government and another nation.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am extremely anxious, as the time is very limited, that this joint resolution shall pass. The questions which are now raised are not really pertinent to this resolution.

Mr. SPOONER. They may be more pertinent than the Senator thinks.

Mr. ALDRICH. Possibly, but I have not seen the connection as yet.

Mr. TELLER. I want to say that if the Senator from Wisconsin is right, there is still just as much necessity for this legislation as if he is wrong.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes. I was only putting in the RECORD, in order that it might be utilized in defense of these Indians hereafter, the discovery of this mistake.

Mr. TELLER. I do not care to discuss the real-estate law, which is exceedingly intricate and very interesting to those who make it a study.

Mr. BAILEY. And very obscure.

Mr. TELLER. And sometimes obscure, and with all the legislation on this subject you will find it very obscure.

Mr. ALDRICH. So far as I can I accept the amendment suggested by the chairman of the committee, as to fixing the time on the 4th of March, 1907.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution as modified at the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota will be stated again to the Senate.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the tribal existence and government of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole tribes or nations of Indians in the Indian Territory are hereby continued in full force and effect for all purposes until the 4th day of March, A. D. 1907, and all acts and parts of acts, so far as they conflict herewith, are hereby repealed.

Mr. ALLISON. That phraseology will continue these tribal relations until the 4th of March, no matter what legislation happens in the meantime.

Mr. TELLER. Oh, no; we can repeal it.

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, no. Any law incompatible with existing law would pro tanto repeal the existing law.

Mr. ALLISON. This is a right given to these Indians to occupy the tribal lands.

Mr. TELLER. I do not think there is any question but what we could repeal this law to-morrow if we wanted to.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it would be safe to say "unless otherwise provided by law."

Mr. ALDRICH and Mr. CLAPP. There is no objection to that.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that would be the safe thing to do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa make that motion?

Mr. ALLISON. I will make that motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "nineteen hundred and seven" it is proposed to insert "unless otherwise provided by law."

Mr. ALLISON. I think I will modify that amendment by making it read "unless sooner provided by law."

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no.

Mr. ALLISON. What I want to secure is that the arrangement shall continue until the 4th of March, 1907, unless it is changed hereafter.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then let the word "hereafter" be inserted, so that it will read "unless hereafter otherwise provided by law."

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "nineteen hundred and seven" it is proposed to insert "unless hereafter otherwise provided by law;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the tribal existence and government of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole tribes or nations of Indians in the Indian Territory are hereby continued in full force and effect for all purposes until the 4th of March, A. D. 1907, unless hereafter otherwise provided by law; and all acts and parts of acts, so far as they conflict herewith, are hereby repealed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it safe enough now.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 28, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

FEDERAL COURT, MIAMI, FLA.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10080) to provide for sittings of the United States circuit and district courts of the southern district of Florida at the city of Miami, in said district.

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act there shall be held at the city of Miami, in the southern district of Florida, a term of both the circuit and district courts of said district, on the third Monday in November of each year: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations shall be furnished for the holding of said courts at said place free of expense to the Government of the United States.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "third" and insert the word "fourth," and in the same line strike out the word "November" and insert the word "April."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CLARK of Florida, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DELEGATE FROM ALASKA.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 956, providing for the election of a Delegate to the House of Representatives from the district of Alaska.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. CUSHMAN] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill, the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 956) providing for the election of a Delegate to the House of Representatives from the district of Alaska.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear the bill read first.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that, as this is a longer bill than the Chair supposed, under all the circumstances, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CUSHMAN] withdraw his request for the present.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I gladly withdraw the request at this time.

BRIDGE ACROSS CUMBERLAND RIVER.

Mr. BUTLER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4482) entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Carthage, Tenn.'"

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 4482, which the Clerk will read.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BUTLER of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. BUTLER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be discharged from further consideration of the bill H. R. 15091 and that the same be laid on the table, a similar Senate bill having been passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS TENNESSEE RIVER.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14589) to authorize the Cairo and Tennessee River Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JAMES, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE CUMBERLAND RIVER.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14590) to authorize the Cairo and Tennessee River Railroad Company to construct a bridge across Cumberland River.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JAMES, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SALE AND CONVEYANCE OF LAND TO STATE OF MINNESOTA.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10101) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and convey to the State of Minnesota a certain tract of land situated in the county of Dakota, State of Minnesota.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to sell and convey unto the State of Minnesota, under such provisions as he may direct, and for such compensation as he may deem adequate, the following tract of land, which was heretofore purchased by the United States for the purpose of allotting the same to certain Sioux Indians, residing in the State of Minnesota, situated in the county of Dakota and State of Minnesota, described as follows, to wit: Southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 27, township No. 115, range 17.

SEC. 2. That the proceeds arising from the sale of such land shall, if the Secretary of the Interior so elect, be paid to said proposed allottees or their representatives, or lieu lands purchased for them elsewhere.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like the gentleman to explain this bill.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, during the year 1888 the sum of $10,000 was appropriated for purchasing certain lands, tools, and implements for the benefit of a few remaining Sioux Indians, who had severed their tribal relations and still resided within the State of Minnesota.

The purchase of this land was for the purpose of allotting the same in severalty to said Indians. The matter has dragged along for years without such allotment being made of all such lands so purchased. The final inspection thereof was made in the year 1904, in which half a dozen or more small tracts were attempted to be allotted. The allotments were made and approved by the Secretary of the Interior as to all except a 40-acre tract lying in the county of Dakota, in the State of Minnesota. That tract was not considered to be suitable for an Indian allotment, owing to its barren condition, and being covered with water, hilly, sandy, and not useful for cultivation. Hence the allotment as to this tract was not approved by the Secretary. However, it has lain there dormant and useless for quite a number of years previous hereto, except some being pastured and a very small part slightly cultivated. During last year the State of Minnesota, through its board of control, desired to purchase this particular 40-acre tract; it is the only remaining tract of the so-called "Sioux allotment." The present bill for that purpose has passed the Committee on Public Lands unanimously.

The Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs have approved it. It leaves to the Secretary of the Interior the sale of it to the State of Minnesota, desiring to purchase it for use in connection with the Minnesota Hospital for the Insane, located at Hastings, Minn. It is not a very valuable tract; worth less perhaps than a thousand dollars in value; and at the present time the State of Minnesota is using it for the purpose of sanitary sewerage purposes, by and with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How many of these Indians have not had lands allotted to them?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. All with the exception of this particular tract.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How many Indians still remain without land allotted to them?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Very few, if any.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And were they all to be given allotment on this 40 acres?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Oh, no; there were various other tracts lying in other counties, some of them in the county of Wabasha, in the district of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY].

Mr. FITZGERALD. How did this bill go to the Committee on Public Lands? These are Indian lands.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Last year I introduced a bill and had it referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, upon the theory that the allotment had been made; but upon investigation it was found that the Indian Affairs Committee had nothing to do with it, because there never had been any allotment; that the Government owned the land in fee; that the Secretary of the Interior refused to make the allotment, because it was not a kind of land that was useful for the Indians at all. Now, the proceeds from the sale of this land is to be used for the purchase of lieu land in place of it for the same Indians.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does this land adjoin a brick yard?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It does not.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman what is the necessity of this bill?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The necessity is that the land will be made available for use by the Minnesota Hospital for the Insane, located at Hastings, Minn., and they are very desirous of having it. The last inspector, Mr. Downs, who appraised the land, valued it at $640; but the Secretary of the Interior will sell it to the State of Minnesota at the best price possible.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How is it to be sold? To the highest bidder at auction, or by sealed bids?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The sale is to be made to the State of Minnesota for the hospital for the insane; but if the price is not satisfactory, the Secretary of the Interior will not sell it. He certainly will not sell lower than the appraised value.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How are the rights of the Indians to be preserved?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The money received therefor is to be distributed to the Indians, or, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, other lands will be purchased of the value thereof and allotted to them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Who has authority to make this sale under your bill?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The Secretary of the Interior alone.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Under either sealed bids or open bids?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It does not provide that. It is to be made in such a manner as he deems proper.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman think that is a very unsafe provision? Ought it not to be at public auction or by sealed bids?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The committee did not deem that necessary.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman think it best that it should be left so that the Secretary of the Interior shall make such trade as he sees proper?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I hardly think a matter of this importance would be crowding the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior very much, especially where he has had two or three appraisals of the value, and I can assure the gentleman that the sale will not be made for any less than the appraised value, and probably for considerably more. This tract of land is badly located, almost absolutely worthless for agricultural purposes. From one-half to three-fourths of it is covered by water from the Vermilion and Mississippi rivers two-thirds of the year.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. All the bills that have been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs have been safeguarded by the provision that the lands shall be appraised and not be sold for less than the appraised value.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. This land has already been appraised twice, and there is a provision that it shall not be sold for less than the appraised value.

I will inform the gentleman that the object of this is to leave it discretionary with the Secretary of the Interior, in order that he may get more than the appraisement. I think the chances are—in fact, I am confident from my knowledge of it—that he will obtain more by several hundred dollars than the $640 appraisement.

Mr. TAWNEY. The insertion of the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Texas would not prevent the Secretary of the Interior from accepting more if he could get it.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Not at all, and I am very willing to have that amendment put in.

Mr. TAWNEY. But it would prevent it being sold for less than the appraised value.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think that amendment should go in, in order to make it conform to the rule.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I offer that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is some other amendment desired?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I offer the following proviso:

Provided, That the land shall not be sold for less than the appraised value.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment to be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of section 1 the words "Provided, That the land shall not be sold at less than the appraised value."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill making appropriations for the Army.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 14397) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, with Mr. BOUTELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that there is a point of order under consideration, and the Chair is very desirous to hear the arguments of Members addressing themselves to this subject.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose on yesterday the Chair had under consideration the point of order made by myself to the paragraph providing for an increase in the clerical force of the headquarters, divisions, and departments of the Army, including the office of Chief of Staff. The point of order I make is that there is no law authorizing this increase of clerical force for these offices, and that therefore the paragraphs are not in order in so far as they involve that increase. The basis of that point of order is the fact that these offices in which these clerks are to be employed do not come under the head of the Executive Departments of the Government. They are not included within what are termed "the Executive Departments of the Government."

There was a decision by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole a few years ago, holding that increases of salaries for these clerks were in order; but subsequently, March 28, 1900, this same question again arose, and I find in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the first session of the Fifty-sixth Congress, on page 3442, this ruling:

The Chair, in looking up the RECORD, discovers that the basis of the decision made by the gentleman from Illinois, while occupying the chair last year, was a statute which provides as follows—

Then follows the statute which I read on yesterday in regard to the provision in appropriation bills for increasing clerk hire for the Executive Departments of the Government. The Chairman proceeds:

So that the decision of the gentleman from Illinois last year was based upon a provision of law for whatever number of clerks Congress chose to appropriate in any particular Department—which is a proposition differing distinctly from that suggested by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Now, I have here the decision of the Attorney-General, as to what constitutes the Executive Departments, and it is only the Executive Departments that are included in section 169 of the Revised Statutes, giving the authority for the increase of clerical force in an appropriation bill. The Attorney-General, on page 267, volume 15, of the Attorney-General's Opinions, says:

The civil Executive Departments are by law established at the seat of Government. They have no existence elsewhere. Only those bureaus and offices can be deemed bureaus or offices in any of these Departments which are constituted, as they are, by the law of its organization. The Department with its bureaus and offices is, in contemplation of the law, an establishment distinct from the branches of the public service and the offices thereof which are under its supervision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask at what date that opinion was published?

Mr. TAWNEY. May 16, 1877. That is all, Mr. Chairman, that I wish to call to the attention of the Chair at this time.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I feel like apologizing to the chairman for taking his time on this question, for it does not seem to me hardly an open question. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] refers to the increase of clerk hire; that is not involved here. He refers to places where the law fixes the salary of clerks on an appropriation bill and the change of salary; that is not involved here. The question involved here is whether on this bill we have a right to provide for clerical force necessary for the Department, divisions, and Chief of Staff. That is all that is involved here.

The same question was raised on exactly this same proposition in the third session of the Fifty-fifth Congress when the gentleman from Alabama raised the point of order on a small increase in the clerical force—not a change of salary, but a small increase in the clerical force. He argued it at length, and I and other gentlemen participated in it; but the gentleman from Illinois, who is now Speaker of the House, threw more light on the subject than any of the rest of us, and I want to read his statement. It will be found on page 2403 of the RECORD of that session.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say a word on the point of order. I do not know as to the propriety of specifically appropriating for these clerks, but I do know that in all the Departments, as well as at the headquarters of the Army, there is a clerical force under general provision of law that is larger or smaller from year to year as the necessities of the service seem to indicate, and that it is always in order upon a general appropriation bill to increase or decrease the item for clerk hire.

Then he quotes certain provisions of law. He was interrupted by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] and proceeded as follows:

What I undertake to say is that the clerical service in the Army and Navy may be 500 or it may be 100, just according to the necessities of the service and without the necessity of formally passing a separate law. So that it is perfectly clear to me, without discussing the wisdom of the provision, that it is in order to make appropriation for one or one hundred clerks.

The Chairman, Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois, after hearing further debate, rendered his decision:

That under this statute it seems clear to the Chair that this is simply following what is authorized by law, and in this Department of War, and is not in violation of section 2 of Rule XXI, as contended for. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

That question, Mr. Chairman, was raised on this identical provision of the Army bill. It was thoroughly discussed by Members of the House and was settled, as I supposed, for all time.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. HULL. In one minute, after I have finished this sentence. The gentleman from Minnesota raises the point of order from line 4 down to and including line 18, I think. Line 4 provides for a chief clerk and is for no increase, and yet it is just as much subject to a point of order as the other. There is no place where it is provided for by any law outside of an appropriation bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but my point of order is not made to line 4 nor line 5 nor line 6. It commences at line 8.

Mr. HULL. Then I misunderstood the gentleman's point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Lines 8 and 9 provide for an increase of two clerks.

Mr. HULL. That does not obviate what I wanted to say. What is proposed, Mr. Chairman, is this: Under the provisions of law certain divisions and departments of the Army are authorized. The Office of Chief of Staff is organized under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War, and it has been conceded always that the Army bill cares for the General of the Army. Now, the Chief of Staff for the department and divisions and that part outside of the proper department clerks—that was all regulated by an amendment agreed upon by the gentleman from Massachusetts, representing the Committee on Appropriations, and myself a few years ago, whereby each of us agreed to keep our hands off the other's territory.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if we can not increase the clerical force we can not appropriate for what are now on the rolls, because the appropriation bill expires on the 30th of June each year, and there is no permanent law by which we can appropriate for a single man. The Department asked for twenty-four clerks and we give them eleven, mostly of the lower grade. That will come up on another proposition if the Chair overrules the point of order. I do believe on this question that there is no basis for the foundation of the gentleman's point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say one word in reply to the gentleman from Iowa. There is no distinction between the appropriation for increase of salary and for the increase of the clerical force, and the decision which was made by the Chair following the decision which he quotes, that of Mr. HOPKINS, is identical in point here for the reason that there is no distinction between increasing the salary of the clerks and increasing the number of clerks in that Department. The point turned on this proposition. The only law on the statute books authorizing the appropriation of money for the payment of clerks or hiring clerks by Departments is section 169 of the Revised Statutes, which reads as follows:

Each head of a Department is authorized to employ in his Department such number of clerks of the several classes recognized by law, and such messengers, assistant messengers, copyists, watchmen, laborers, and other employees, and at such rates of compensation respectively as may be appropriated for by Congress from year to year.

Now, the authority to employ clerks appropriated for in appropriation bills is limited to the heads of Departments, and under the decision of the Attorney-General holding or defining what the head of a Department is, clearly there is no authority in law then for the increase of the number of clerks in these several headquarters.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] makes the point of order that the items upon pages 9 and 10 providing for an increase in the number of clerks, messengers, and laborers at headquarters of divisions and departments and the Office of the Chief of Staff are obnoxious to clause 2 of Rule XXI. So much of that clause as applies to this case is as follows:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law.

The first question is, What law authorizes this appropriation? The only law referred to is that contained in section 169 of the Revised Statutes, which is as follows:

Each head of a Department is authorized to employ in his Department such number of clerks of the several classes recognized by law, and such messengers, assistant messengers, copyists, watchmen, laborers, and other employees, and at such rates of compensation, respectively, as may be appropriated for by Congress from year to year.

The next question, of course, is whether these clerks referred to in the items to which objection has been made are to be employed by the head of a Department and in his Department. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] is quite correct in his statement of the ruling made by the occupant of the Chair [Mr. HOPKINS], as referred to on page 2404 of the RECORD, third session Fifty-fifth Congress, but it appears that at that time the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole was not familiar with the ruling of the Attorney-General, which has been submitted to. In that ruling, which was referred to in the following year in the decision made by the occupant of the Chair at that time [Mr. SHERMAN of New York], overruling the decision of Mr. HOPKINS, are found these words, defining a Department:

The Department, with its bureaus or branches, is in contemplation of the law an establishment distinct from the branches of the public service and the officers thereof which are under its supervision.

This will be found in volume 15 of the opinions of the Attorney-General, on page 267. It seems, therefore, that in arriving at a conclusion on this question the present occupant of the Chair must hold that a Department, as referred to in section 169 of the Revised Statutes, refers to that branch of the Government technically known as an Executive Department, and presided over by a member of the Cabinet, and located in the city of Washington.

Now, then, are the clerks provided for in these items so employed? On page 10 of this bill, in line 18, will be found the proviso:

Provided, That no clerk, messenger, or laborer at headquarters of divisions, departments, or Office of the Chief of Staff shall be assigned to duty with any bureau of the War Department.

So that aside from what has been developed in the debate it would appear to the Chair that these clerks, messengers, and laborers are to be employed outside of the Department, technically so called, and are to be employed in various parts of the country at headquarters of the Army, headquarters of the division, and at other points. It will be seen that the decision rendered by Mr. SHERMAN directly overruled the decision rendered by Mr. HOPKINS a year earlier, but this same question came up even later, on December 9, 1904, when the legislative appropriation bill was before the Committee of the Whole House, and an item in the bill provided for the increase in the number of clerks in the Civil Service Commission. A point of order was made for the same reason that has been assigned in the case under consideration, and the opinion was rendered by Mr. DALZELL, then Chairman of the Committee of the Whole. In rendering his decision he referred specifically to the point made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], that if the ruling of the Attorney-General were correct, there was perhaps no law providing for any of these different clerks outside of the Department proper, except the appropriation bills of previous years, and the Chairman then said:

> The enactment of an appropriation bill is not a provision of law any more than for the current year, and it gains no force by having been repeated for two, three, or any number of succeeding years.

It would appear, therefore, from the ruling of the Attorney-General and from these decisions that the clerks of the Government outside of the Departments in Washington must be provided for by specific law, and that items in an appropriation bill providing for such clerks or increasing their number beyond that previously provided by law would not be in order. The Chair, therefore, is constrained to sustain the point of order.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I shall not appeal from the decision of the Chair, because the Chair is generally very correct in his rulings. I can not agree with the Chair, but as there is another place where this can be remedied I suggest that the items in regard to clerks, messengers, captain of the watch, and everything connected with the Department outside of Washington and affecting the War College go out of the bill, because, in my judgment, under the decision of the Chair we have no right to provide for a single clerk or messenger. I shall not raise a point of order to the few clerks left in the bill because a point of order has not been raised. They amount to nothing. If this is not corrected in another way public business must stop.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the chairman of the committee specify for the convenience of the Clerk the lines to go out with this understanding?

Mr. HULL. I can state it. There is no increase in the first, office of Chief of Staff, $2,000 per annum, and there is no increase under the provision of $1,800. I should say lines 8 and 9 would go out, because there is an increase there of 2. Ten and 11 will go out, because there is an increase of 1. Twelve and 13 will go out, because there is an increase of 3. Fourteen and 15 will go out, as there is an increase of 5. Then, I suppose, captain of the watch goes out; 3 watchmen go out, and all goes out from there down. One packer goes out. Messengers go out, because there is an increase of 5.

Mr. TAWNEY. And lines 5 and 6, page 10.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the gardener go out?

Mr. HULL. Yes, sir; and laborers go out in line 8, page 10. Two laborers, at $600, in line 9, I understand, go out and 5 charwomen go out. I think that is as far as they go out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it the intention of the gentleman from Iowa not to ask that the clerks now authorized be covered?

Mr. HULL. My judgment is, if we can not give what the Department think is necessary we have no right to appropriate at all. There are none authorized by law outside of this appropriation bill. If the gentleman from New York raises the point of order on the other clerks, I will cheerfully yield and say they ought to go out, as appropriations from year to year do not make law, and we have no right to keep any under the decision.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not raising the point of order. I am asking the gentleman from Iowa if he is deliberately requesting the House not to appropriate for clerks conceded to be required for the Department and against which no point of order has been made?

Mr. HULL. No, sir; I am only letting them go out where the point of order is raised.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The point of order, I understand, was raised against certain increases made.

Mr. HULL. Certainly; that is my understanding, too.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman does not ask that there be kept in the bill the number of clerks heretofore authorized?

Mr. HULL. The gentleman is not asking any because they are not authorized by law. There is no law on the statute books of the country that provides for one of them. If the decision of the Chair is correct we could only provide for clerks by the favor of the Committee on Appropriations. I can not ask that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no law that provides for a great many clerks that are authorized without objection.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman from Iowa does not concede that it is any more important to appropriate for what we have had heretofore than it is for the number that is now recommended. The Committee of the Whole and the House has no opportunity to pass upon whether they are necessary or not. It has passed beyond that point, and the gentleman from Iowa has nothing further to say on the subject.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will ask the gentleman whether that is what he meant by his statement a while ago when he said there is another place where these clerks could be provided for under the law.

Mr. HULL. I did not mean the Appropriations Committee, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. TAWNEY. I wanted to know whether they are in this bill.

Mr. HULL. No, sir; it is not in this bill, but I have no doubt it will be in the bill before it becomes a law.

Mr. TAWNEY. I thought possibly they were in there now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is there still opportunity to offer an amendment along here?

The CHAIRMAN. The section has been read for amendment, and the point of order that was made has just been decided, so the section would have to be open to amendment, except so far as amendments might relate to these paragraphs which have gone out.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What goes out of the bill by the point of order—fifteen of the clerks or the increase of two clerks?

The CHAIRMAN. The entire paragraph.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then it would require a motion to provide for thirteen clerks—putting that provision back in the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It would require such a motion, and it would be necessary further to show that the amendment was in order upon this bill if a point of order should be raised.

Mr. WILLIAMS. So that the ruling of the Chair really is that not only the increase in clerkships and laborers, and so forth, go out, but even those that were in employ prior and are in employ now?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that it seems to be the condition in reference to many of the Departments that it is necessary to bring in a general statute providing for the clerks employed outside of the Departments, technically so called, in Washington.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And this committee can bring in a bill whenever it pleases providing for present existing force?

The CHAIRMAN. Or for any future increase in existing force.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, in reference to this general matter, I desire simply to say that outside of any statute I have myself regarded the supply of such clerks as are needed from time to time in the management of headquarters of the Army as the carrying out of a great public work, and under the exception to the rule which provides for appropriations for that purpose the headquarters have to be maintained by those officers, and the necessary expense of maintaining those headquarters seems to be within the purview of the bill. I say this with all deference to the Chair, because it may come up on a subsequent point of order, and I do not want to be barred from putting that point before the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $329,040.

Mr. HULL. This is a kind of addition, and it is impossible to make that at this time—to make an amendment covering the exact amount—and I move it be stricken out, as it is no part of the law, anyhow.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, which paragraph is that?

Mr. HULL. It is simply the summing up—the total in line 15, on page 10, of the bill. It will have to be changed to agree with the change in the bill.

Mr. SLAYDEN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. With that stricken out, what becomes of the paragraph covered by lines 16, 17, and 18 and the proviso from line 18 down to line 21, inclusive?

The CHAIRMAN. That portion of the bill has not yet been read.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have an amendment to offer to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

And said clerks and messengers and laborers shall be employed and assigned by the Secretary of War to the offices and positions in which they are to serve: Provided, That no clerk, messenger, or laborer at headquarters of divisions, departments, or office of the Chief of Staff, shall be assigned to duty with any bureau in the War Department.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I think it is important to leave that, as far as clerks are concerned, because all of these divisions in the departments and the chiefs of staff now have seven clerks. They have no messengers or laborers. Therefore, I move to strike out the words "and messengers and laborers" on line 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, before this amendment is read I would like to submit a statement to the House to the effect that the amendment is really more pertinent to page 6, under the head of "Pay of enlisted men," and I would like if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will give me his attention for just a moment, in order that I may state the nature of this amendment.

Mr. HULL. It is hardly in order at this time to return to that. The gentleman had better wait until we finish up that which we are on now, and then ask unanimous consent to return to that paragraph.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that my purpose was to offer it as an amendment here, preferably, if I can secure permission to return to the "Pay of enlisted men."

Mr. HULL. It would be better to ask unanimous consent to return to that and offer it where the gentleman thinks it belongs.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Then I will wait, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the words "messenger or laborer," occurring in line 19, page 10, be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 10, line 19, strike out the words "messenger or laborer."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman from Texas will ask unanimous consent to return to page 6——

Mr. SLAYDEN. I ask unanimous consent to return to that part of the bill which provides for the enlisted men, and offer this as an amendment on page 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to return to page 6 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. YOUNG. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman what the amendment is.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman will hear it read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, and pending the objection reserved by the gentleman from Michigan, the Clerk will report the amendment.

Insert after line 17, page 6, the following:

"Provided further, That hereafter the Secretary of War shall be authorized to detach from the Army at large such number of enlisted men as may be necessary to perform duty at the various recruit depots and the United States Military Prison, and of the enlisted men so detached, and while performing such duty, there shall be allowed for each depot and the prison one who shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of battalion or squadron sergeant-major, and for each recruit and prison company one who shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of first sergeant, five the rank, pay, and allowances of sergeant, and six the rank, pay, and allowances of corporal, of the arm of the service to which they respectfully belong."

Mr. TAWNEY. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will state, first, that the amendment, if it should become law, will actually result in a saving, not very great in amount it is true, but an annual saving in the charges upon the Treasury. It is for the more efficient and satisfactory management of these details that are now sent to recruiting stations and to recruiting depots. Since the reorganization act of the 1st of February, 1901, three recruiting depots have been established. It is necessary to have a number of men and of a certain rank—noncommissioned rank—at these various recruiting stations and depots. In order to provide for that, enlisted men have been given the rank and detailed to the duties. The terms of these men have expired from time to time, and they have been taken away and have gone out of the service upon the expiration of their enlistments, and new men have gone in, entailing the expense on the Government of transporting other details to the various recruiting stations and depots. I will ask the Clerk to read a letter from General Bates, Chief of Staff, as to the necessity for this change.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF,
Washington, November 29, 1905.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to section 31 of the act of February 2, 1901, entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the permanent military establishment of the United States." This section provides:

"SEC. 31. That the Secretary of War is authorized to detach from the Army at large such number of enlisted men as may be necessary to perform duty at the various recruiting stations, and while performing such duty one member of each party shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of sergeant, and one the rank, pay, and allowances of corporal of the arm of the service to which they respectively belong."

Since the passage of this act, in addition to the recruiting stations referred to therein, three recruit depots have been established, one at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., one at Columbus Barracks, Ohio, and one at Fort Slocum, N. Y. At each of these depots recruit companies have been organized, to which recruits are sent, upon enlistment, for instruction, until assigned to regiments or corps. Under the provisions of the act above quoted it is impossible to give these depots the necessary noncommissioned officers for the organizations now authorized. The noncommissioned officers now with those companies were obtained by increasing the number of sergeants and corporals in certain infantry and cavalry organizations, under the provisions of sections 2 and 10 of the act of February 2, 1901, and then assigning such noncommissioned officers to the recruit companies at these three depots. This method is unsatisfactory and, in some measure, inefficient.

As it is not possible under the law to increase the number of sergeants of cavalry, the necessary sergeants for service with the recruit companies at Jefferson Barracks were detached from the Fifteenth Cavalry and the Eleventh Cavalry, these sergeants being replaced in their troops by extra corporals authorized for those regiments under the law cited above.

Nor is there any way by which a sergeant-major for the recruit battalion at each of the three depots can be obtained, and the necessity for a sergeant-major in each of them is probably greater than in any other battalions in the service, the paper work concerning an enlisted man being greater at the time of his entry into service than at any other time.

The number of noncommissioned officers provided by the method before indicated is inadequate for the duty demanded of them, and has been so reported by the Inspector-General of the Army as a result of his inspection of these depots. Each recruit company should have the peace organization of an infantry company, i. e., one first sergeant, five sergeants, and six corporals, and each recruit battalion should have one sergeant-major.

I therefore urge the submission to Congress at its coming session of the following bill:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized to detach from the Army at large such number of enlisted men as may be necessary to perform duty at the various recruit depots, and of the enlisted men so detached, and while performing such duty, there shall be allowed for each depot one who shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of battalion or squadron sergeant-major, and for each recruit company one who shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of first sergeant, five the rank, pay, and allowances of sergeant, and six the rank, pay, and allowances of corporal, of the arm of the service to which they respectively belong."

Very respectfully,

J. C. BATES,
Major-General, Acting Chief of Staff.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota insist upon the point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota withdraws the point of order.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to strike out the last word. We have just had a little parliamentary experience that might be rendered profitable in its way. We have discovered that about $300,000 of this bill was there without any previous authorization of law, and that makes one a little bit prone to look in doubt at these additional expenses and increases, say $24,000, offered in this bill, and what a beautiful illustration it is.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman will allow just one correction there. I simply want to correct the statement, for I know he does not wish to misstate the facts. The $329,040 includes all in the bill that comprised these positions.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why did the gentleman ask unanimous consent to have these items stricken out?

Mr. HULL. Because it was a matter of addition. It is no part of the law, as a matter of fact. In the short time allowed in the House it would be impossible to omit it and make the total what it should be.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How much of this was there in that shape?

Mr. HULL. The amount stricken out is part of the clerk hire.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I understood the ruling of the Chair, in striking out the increases, it struck out existing appropriations as being equally without authorization of law. Whatever may be the amount, Mr. Chairman—let us say $100,000, whatever it may be—we discover that there has been not only an attempt in this Congress of making new places and allowing increases of salary without authorization of law, but that past Congresses have been doing it simply because the point of order was not made under the rules. So it is a beautiful illustration of the manner in which things are run. This illustrates the truth of the old saying about abuses that "grow by what they feed on—themselves." A few years ago the Army of the United States was 100,000 men. I believe it is claimed that it is now 57,000 men; yet in this bill we find a proposition to increase by twenty-three thousand eight hundred and some odd dollars the clerical service that is necessary at headquarters of the various divisions and departments in the office of the Chief of Staff in order to keep note upon the Army and see that the Army is properly clericalized.

In other words, it is well that the country should learn that even a decrease of the Army does not bring about very much of a decrease of expenditure, because right at the beginning of an increase of the Army the boys in harness, working with the party in power, have not found out where the jobs lie, and it takes them quite a long time to find out and to put new men in, and sometimes they do not find it out until the Army has been positively decreased. The illustration of this bill, that this Army, with fifty thousand and odd men, must have its clerical force increased by nearly $25,000 over and above what it was when the Army was very much larger, is a thing that I think ought to rest in the mind of the country.

Now, of course, Mr. Chairman, not one of us is deceived by anything that the House does in a moment of strenuousness. The House rises on its hind legs now and then and postures through the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and "undertakes to check expenditures." Of course, every one of us who has been here beyond five weeks knows that when this bill gets back from the Senate it will get back with all these House committee increases on it and some Senatorial increases besides, and then the House will pass the bill just as it comes back from the Senate, swallowing all the increases and all the extravagance, after having made a record for itself as a lover of economy upon a brilliant heyday gala day that has gone into the past.

If I could believe that we were going to stand here in conference and resist these increases, I should feel very much better. Here are three increases at $1,600; here is one increase at $1,400; here are three increases at $1,200; here are five increases at $1,000; here is an increase at $900; here is an increase at $720, and then here is one gardener provided for at $720. I do not know just what the clerical duties of the gardener are, nor where the gardener carries on his gardening, but the bill will come back to us with the gardener in it, and all the balance of it, from the Senate.

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent that I may have two minutes. This is all by unanimous consent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before I sit down, if the gentleman from Iowa will excuse me, my mind has been enlightened, and I am told that the gardener belongs to the War College, which, I understand, has cost us something like a million dollars and now has about seven students.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi is too fair a man to want to send out the impression that these clerks and messengers at department and division headquarters are not needed, and that it has been an extravagance to have them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman did not say that. The gentleman said that these increases were not needed, and that they constitute an extravagance.

Mr. HULL. Well, I do not believe the gentleman is informed even on that subject. The Department asked for an increase of twenty-four. The committee cut it down to eleven, refused to increase in the higher salaries, and gave increases, two at $1,600, one at $1,400, three at $1,200, and five at $1,000, and refused thirteen clerks that the hearings gave us very good proof they could use to good advantage, and that they insisted they must have.

Now, I suppose it will be of some interest to the House to know where these clerks are located, and I have here a statement of them, which I will read:

Assignment of clerks, office of Chief of Staff, division and department headquarters, etc.

| | Clerks. | Messengers. | Laborers. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Office of Chief of Staff | 46 | 14 | 2 |
| Headquarters— | | | |
| Atlantic Division | 9 | 4 | |
| Northern Division | 8 | 4 | |
| Southwestern Division | 6 | 4 | |
| Pacific Division | 8 | 4 | |
| Philippines Division | 47 | 13 | |
| Headquarters Department— | | | |
| California | 10 | 3 | |
| Colorado | 8 | 4 | |
| Columbia | 8 | 3 | |
| Dakota | 7 | 3 | |
| East | 11 | 3 | |
| Gulf | 8 | 3 | |
| Lakes | 7 | 3 | |
| Missouri | 9 | 3 | |
| Texas | 8 | 3 | |
| District of Porto Rico | 1 | | |
| United States Military Academy | 6 | 1 | |
| Recruiting depot, Columbus Barracks | 1 | | |
| Artillery School | 1 | | |
| General Service and Staff College | 4 | | |
| Cavalry and Field Artillery School | 1 | | |
| Attending surgeon's office, Washington | | 1 | |
| Total | 214 | 73 | 2 |

The gentleman will see by this that there are serving in the office of the Chief of Staff 46 clerks, 14 messengers, and 2 laborers. Does the gentleman believe that number too many? I call the gentleman's attention to these other figures. The total is only 214 clerks, 73 messengers, and 2 laborers, in all the division and department headquarters, the Philippines, Porto Rico, the Military Academy, twenty-two different offices, scattered all over this country, and on the other side of the world.

The General of the Army, General Chaffee, a man whom I believe is just as anxious to save the public funds as the gentleman from Mississippi or any Member of this House can be; General Chaffee, who is a good soldier, an honest, upright man, who went over this carefully with the committee and showed where these additional clerks are needed, asked us to grant him 24 additional clerks. We cut down the 24 to 11.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the gentleman passes that—were not all these headquarters and various other appendages to the Army in existence last year and doing the work that they are doing this year?

Mr. HULL. Not entirely.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And just as important as they are this year. And if the Army itself has not grown, why must they grow?

Mr. HULL. The appropriations for the headquarters at the War College have grown on account of the increased labor. They have been trying to fill these offices with detailed men and pay them extra-duty pay, but it has not worked well; they could not get the right work done. They asked us to give them clerks, and we divided the number asked for, and proposed to let them carry on the business in part with detailed men another year and see how it would work.

Take the part of the bill the gentleman refers to as to the War College. He properly says that it has cost nearly a million of dollars. It has cost $800,000, but that is a public building authorized by law. Whether wisely or unwisely, it is too late to discuss now. Those that are familiar with military matters believe it is a wise provision to have a War College where the best officers who graduate in schools at Riley and Leavenworth and Fortress Monroe can have an additional post-graduate school for the highest training in matters pertaining to war.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question purely for information?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. What is the contemplation as to the number of persons that will attend this War College at any one time?

Mr. HULL. About thirty.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. And it has cost $800,000?

Mr. HULL. Nearly $800,000; but it is the headquarters for all the General Staff, and it will be used largely for valuable maps and documents. It started with the proposition to have a $400,000 building, but it has grown away from that amount—whether wisely or unwisely, it is too late to discuss now.

What I want to call attention to is that it is a public building that will be finished before this fiscal year we are now legislating for begins. It is necessary to care for that building, and yet there is no authority of law that authorizes the General of the Army to employ these men, and never has been.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. HULL. In a moment. I suppose the Committee on Appropriations would hardly have jurisdiction over it, because it does not come under the Secretary of War directly as a bureau of his Department.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman's committee has jurisdiction over all legislation pertaining to the Army, has it not?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it not competent for the gentleman's committee to bring in a bill fixing the number of clerks by law to be employed in the different departments?

Mr. HULL. The difficulty is to get the bill through; the gentleman from Minnesota would be the first one to raise a point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, but the gentleman does not have to have unanimous consent to consider it.

Mr. HULL. We have to have unanimous consent or else have a rule.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman's committee has jurisdiction of the legislation, and the committee has never attempted it.

Mr. HULL. No; it has never been held that we had to do it. Heretofore ample authority has been given to do this on appropriation bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman from Iowa permit a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I believe the gentleman has stated that the General of the Army is as desirous as the committee to keep down expenses of the Government.

Mr. HULL. I think his desire is to keep the appropriations under his jurisdiction as low as he can with efficiency.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understood the gentleman to state that the General recommended twenty-four additional clerks and the committee had given them eleven.

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Well, which is correct, the General or the committee?

Mr. HULL. The future will have to determine that. After another year if he finds out that he can not do the business with the enlisted men with the extra-duty pay, he is correct. If he can do it, the committee is correct.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But he asks for thirteen clerks that the committee thinks that he did not need.

Mr. HULL. Oh, the gentleman from Texas is quibbling on a very small matter. The gentleman from Texas must realize that men of equal honesty, and equally desirous of promoting the public good, may have opposite views as to what the public good requires. I have even known the gentleman from Texas to differ with his colleagues whom he would admit were as honest as himself, and yet it is no imputation upon either one of them. But when the gentleman comes to me with that kind of a proposition, he is not seeking light, but only quibbling, as I know some attorneys in my State to quibble when practicing before a justice of the peace.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In reply to the gentleman, let me say that the gentleman knows that the Department always asks for a great deal more than it expects to get, expecting to get it cut down in the House.

Mr. HULL. That is not my experience with the departments of the Army.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I think it of some importance that some statement be placed in the RECORD in answer to the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] that appropriations have been made in past years for many of these clerks and messengers without warrant of law.

I have been responsible in part for some years past for some of these appropriations, and I differ most respectfully with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and with the ruling of the Chair. As I construe the law, there has been no necessity for any express provision for the employment of any of these clerks or messengers. The very situation of them, the duties they have to perform, shows the necessity. During the civil war, and for a long time after, this work was performed by a "general-service corps," so called, of the Army, composed of enlisted men, as much a part of the Army of the United States as were the infantry, cavalry, artillery, and the other branches of the service, and required no express provision of law for its existence. That was changed subsequently, but the same work of a military character remained. That work was then performed, in part by details of enlisted men, in part by the employment of these military clerks. These men do work partially military and partially civil in its character. They are under the orders of the Secretary of War the same as any officer of the Army. They are sent everywhere they are needed, wherever the Secretary of War decides they should go. This power exists under the general military authority of the Secretary of War. There is a proposition now pending somewhere, advocated by the War Department, reestablishing the general-service corps, which would, of course, take these clerks out of this bill. I believe it would be good policy for this reason. If every one of these clerks were eliminated from this bill, the service would yet have to be performed. Somebody would do it. It would be done by enlisted men from the Army detailed for that purpose and receiving extra-duty pay.

Now, that is a demoralizing thing to the Army. It is expensive, in the first place, to pay the soldier his usual monthly pay and 50 cents per day in addition. But, in addition to that, it has a very demoralizing effect upon the Army, and for this reason: These men are picked from various companies; they are private soldiers or noncommissioned officers. They are detailed to warm offices, comfortable quarters, and get extra pay for it. They are excused from the ordinary routine of a soldier's life, excused from guard duty, excused from drills and things of that kind, and perform easier clerical work. That completely demoralizes the discipline of the Army. It makes dissatisfaction with the men. It causes desertion, and is one of the things that the officers of the Army are extremely anxious to avoid. For that reason these clerks are needed in the various departmental headquarters of the country. They are engaged to prevent the use of extra-duty men, to prevent these breaches of discipline in the Army. So for that reason I desire to place on record my opinion that there was ample warrant of war for the employment of these clerks in the past; there is now; and they ought to be in the Army bill as a part of the military establishment of the country. One thing more. Some of these clerks are needed for divisions of the Army. I do not know how many, as I am not acquainted with the details of this bill. I think the creation of divisions in the Army is a mistake. I think they are only created for the purpose of employing our surplus major-generals. I think that it is an injury to public business to have military divisions. There should be nothing between the local military departments and the general War Department, and I apprehend that quite a number of these increases are needed for the military divisions, and if so, I confess I have not much sympathy with it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman says it is demoralizing to the discipline of the Army to employ the enlisted men as clerks. Has it the same effect when they are employed as mechanics at different places?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Certainly. The enlisted men of the Army are soldiers. They ought to be employed only in the duty of a soldier; they ought not to be employed in any other work. They are soldiers and should be used as such, and in that way only can the Army be serviceable as an Army.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But they are employed as carpenters, painters, and men of different trades.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And no attempt has ever been made, as far as I know, to stop that.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Oh, I differ with the gentleman. Various attempts have been made. Officers have constantly complained about it to the Committee on Military Affairs, and we have tried to stop it, and it ought to be stopped. The enlisted men of the Army ought to be soldiers and soldiers only, and they ought not to be clerks and mechanics in disguise.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to reinsert the last two words, for the purpose of asking a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Mississippi may proceed for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, can the gentleman from Minnesota tell me how the amount of money sought to be appropriated in this bill for pay of clerks, messengers, or laborers at headquarters of divisions, departments, or office of the Chief of Staff compares with the amount appropriated under the same head when the Army was 100,000 strong?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I am not now a member of the Military Committee, and so I do not claim to have very much information on that subject.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] that question, if I can have his attention.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that it has increased, and it has increased because there have been more divisions and more departments created.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then can the gentleman answer me this question: Why should there be more headquarters and more divisions and more officers, or chiefs of staff, or whatever it is, with an army of 57,000 than with an army of 100,000?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I think the size of the Army would have very little to do with the proposition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It would have this much to do with it, would it not? While I will admit the number of divisions, etc., ought not to increase in arithmetical proportion to the increase of the Army, I suppose it would be admitted they ought not to increase at all with a decrease of the Army?

Mr. HULL. I will say, Mr. Chairman, under the reorganization act, which provided for a very material increase in the line and staff of the Army, there was an increase of the clerical force, and I would say when we had a hundred thousand we had the same number of officers we have now; that is, the authorized hundred thousand. At the time we had the larger Army and volunteers, it was largely in the field, and very little clerical work was entailed as a result of it. Now, in the Philippine Islands, when we had the army of a hundred thousand we had only one point—at Manila. Since that time we have spread out and divided the island into departments, commanded by brigadier-generals. We did not have then the War College and the different schools for the instruction of the artillery, infantry, and cavalry, which have all made an additional increase of clerical force necessary. The General Staff has largely increased the necessity for clerical force by the law putting upon these officers certain duties of investigation, the formulation of plans, the studying of questions, etc., which have increased the clerical force, and it will be just as much now as it would be if we had 100,000 men, unless we largely increased the officers.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I understand the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to admit that the clerical force here and the pay for them, "Pay of clerks, messengers, and laborers at headquarters of divisions and departments," and Office of the Chief of Staff has increased, although the Army has decreased.

Mr. HULL. I will say there has been no increase since 1899, except what is proposed in this bill, with the exception of five two years ago.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is proposed to increase them in this bill. I understand the gentleman to say that has become necessary by the evolution of events. That evolution of events has consisted chiefly in a decrease in the efficient fighting force of the United States. Now, then, from that explanation I gather only this, that even if we decrease the efficiency of the fighting force of the United States we do not decrease the number of "clerks, gardeners, captains of watch, messengers," and things that are to take care of it. I understand that it might be possible, even under that same philosophy, that in proportion as we decrease the Army the other expenses connected with the Army would increase.

Mr. Chairman, I am not a military expert. What I do not know about military affairs—although I spent two years as a cadet being taught the duty of not walking pigeontoed and getting up to a drumbeat and going to bed when a horn blew—would fill three or four Encyclopædias Britannica; but it does seem to me that a little common sense ought to teach the fact there is some mysterious undermining influence somewhere that manages always when it will to keep in statu quo at any rate offices already created, notwithstanding the decrease of the Army itself, the thing which they serve, and manages to go beyond that and to create additional offices as mere appendages to the Army service when the Army itself is decreasing in fighting force and in every other way. The gentleman says it is largely due to the reorganization bill. Some of us had the notion at that time maybe the reorganization bill would provide, as the gentleman from Minnesota said, for a few extra major-generals at new divisions and things of that sort, and now we have the proof of it. Can it be possible that a great committee of this House can not put the Army of the United States, which ought to be a working machine, upon a working-machine basis? Is it not possible that they can cut off some useless expenses of a clerical, messenger, and labor character and put it where, in case of war, the money would be doing at least some good?

I think we could get along with a lot less enlisted men and a lot less major-generals and one less Lieutenant-General and some less brigadier-generals and some less colonels, but at any rate we would be getting along with some less clerks, messengers, and laborers and gardeners and some less expensive provision for one of these war colleges, one of which I believe has now seven students and the other has eleven, at least so I am informed, the two of which have cost us, as I am also informed, considerably over a million dollars. In fact, I am informed at one of them that it costs about $33,000 a year to take care of one student. That is the average when you divide it up. And now I see that in this bill we are going further; we are going to give them a gardener. Just for what express purpose I do not know, and I do not understand why it is necessary that they should have a gardener of their own instead of buying their vegetables from the market. Perhaps we will give them barbers after while, and it would not be a bad idea to furnish them with bootblacks at the expense of the Government.

Mr. OLMSTED. Do you not think that they ought to have at least one gardener for the field service?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think they have at least one gardener for the field service as far as the War College goes. As an agricultural proposition, of course, a "gardener for field" service is required, but as a military proposition it suggests only what an old friend once called the "inapproviousness of the interrogatory." I want to leave my injunction, which is always taken so seriously by the gentleman from Iowa, who admires my statesmanship and never by any means imitates it, and who envies my spirit of economy but never follows in my pathway—I want to enjoin upon him to use the great influence of this great committee to see if we can not get more bread in proportion to the quantity of sack. The gentleman will remember how Prince Hal was disappointed when he opened Jack Falstaff's pockets and found an enormous number of bills for an enormous number of pounds' worth of sack and only 6 pennyworths of bread. It seems to me we might get along with less fringes, and adornments, and appendages, and clerks, and messengers, and gardeners, and all the balance of the sack, and have more Army in proportion. And, by the way, the system as it is would account partially for the reason that our Army costs us two or three times as much per man as any other army on the surface of the globe.

The Clerk read as follows:

For additional pay to such officers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay, $26,550.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, in line 22, page 12, of the bill, I move to strike out the words "and fifty."

I want to say just a few words in reply to my genial friend from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. I want to say to him that I would be glad if I could occasionally agree with him, for I like him, but it is impossible to do so on these questions. After listening to his argument with attention and to his wit with admiration, I am persuaded that when he said what he did not know of the Army would make a book equal to the Encyclopedia Britannica, he was stating a fact.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we do pay our Army more than any other on earth. Why? Because under this Government we have the volunteer system only, not the conscription. In every other government, except England, a man is compelled to serve in the army, and the question of his pay does not enter into the proposition at all. We pay our soldiers more than three times as much as any other country, with the exception of Great Britain. Austria pays 90 cents a month to her soldiers, Japan pays 42 cents a month to her soldiers, Germany pays two dollars and a half a month to her soldiers, France about the same, because in these Governments it is recognized that every man must serve in the army. England has a volunteer system, and pays $9 a month to her soldiers. We pay $13. And I want to tell you, gentlemen, that I hope the time will never come when we will not be able to pay at least the pittance we now pay the Army, so that we can depend upon the volunteer soldier to carry our banner in time of peace or in time of war.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman certainly did not understand me as objecting to the $13 a month that is paid to our enlisted men?

Mr. HULL. No; but the gentleman said that we were paying three times as much as any other nation to keep up the Army.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was saying that there was no use for these clerks.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Chairman, one other word. At the time when we were having our war with Spain and our larger Army there was a large army of civilian employees paid higher wages than is proposed by this bill. In most cases they have now been discharged and mustered out. There has been no extravagance in this matter, in my judgment. I want to say to my friend from Mississippi that under the laws that are now upon the statute books we have the best working Army we have ever had, and the equal of the working army of any country on earth. In place of the officers spending their time in dissipation or idleness they are compelled to keep up their studies, remain abreast of the time in military information, or they are liable to lose their commission in the Army. That has led to the requirement of an elevated standard of the officers. Under the present laws, with your schools in different parts of the country, the officers are compelled to keep up or be mustered out. We have an Army that is to-day more effective than any this Republic ever had before in its history; an Army of educated and accomplished officers, of brave and patriotic enlisted force. In place of being criticised for it, my judgment is the Congress of the United States and the Department of War, which has led to this reform, should be congratulated by the whole country on raising the standard of efficiency to its present high plane.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman sits down, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa one question for information. Now, if these soldiers of Russia and Austria and these other places only get these odd cents a month, why do not they make them serve for nothing? Why do they give them the odd cents?

Mr. HULL. I suppose they could answer that better than I, but that is the system they are paying them under, all the same.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But you are an expert, and I am not.

Mr. HULL. I am not an expert on matters of the armies of foreign nations, but the armies of several nations do pay more for the higher officers, much more, than this country pays for our officers of high rank.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to know why they pay them these few cents.

Mr. HULL. I am not able to state. I only give the information as I have it. I suppose they could make them serve for nothing. I would suggest my friend write the State Department on this.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Iowa state his amendment again?

Mr. HULL. Strike out, in line 22, page 12, the words "and fifty."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 22, strike out the words "and fifty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

RETIRED OFFICERS.

For pay of officers on the retired list and for officers who may be placed thereon during the current year, $2,300,000: Provided, That retired officers of the Army above the grade of major, heretofore or hereafter assigned to active duty, shall hereafter receive their full retired pay and shall receive no further pay or allowances from the United States: Provided further, That a colonel or lieutenant-colonel so assigned shall receive the full pay of a major on the active list: Provided further, That hereafter no officer holding a rank above that of colonel shall be retired on his own application until he shall have served at least one year in such rank.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out in line 16, of page 14, the words "on his own application," and insert in lieu thereof the words "except for disability, or on account of having reached the age of 64 years."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out from line 8, after the word "dollars," down to and including the word "list," in line 14, and insert in lieu thereof the words:

That a colonel or lieutenant-colonel heretofore or hereafter assigned to active duty shall hereafter receive the same pay and allowances as a retired major would receive under like assignment.

Mr. Chairman, in support of this I desire to say that the intention is to give a colonel and lieutenant-colonel exactly the same pay on the active list when assigned to duty in the militia or to colleges or the recruiting service as a major on the active list. That was intended to be done last session of Congress, but in fixing it on the floor we gave a colonel and lieutenant-colonel that served in the schools or detailed to colleges the same as a major received, but the language as fixed here in the bill by the committee reduced the pay of the colonel and lieutenant-colonel somewhat below that of a major, which is unfair, as everyone will admit. This change in the language authorized by the committee will make it so that each one of these officers will receive the same pay. I will ask that the Clerk read the argument which I send to the desk, which fully explains the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

As the law stands to-day—

A retired brigadier-general assigned to any duty, college or otherwise, receives his retired pay only, $343.75.

A retired colonel or lieutenant-colonel assigned to any duty receives the active pay and commutation of quarters of a major ($339.67 if he has had twenty years' service) and mileage for travel performed under proper orders.

A retired major receives the same as a colonel or lieutenant-colonel except for college duty; he does not receive commutation of quarters, $48 per month, nor mileage.

Omcers below the grade of major are in the same status as that of major.

Under proposed provision, page 14—

The colonels and lieutenant-colonels will not receive commutation of quarters nor mileage for any duty. Thus a major assigned to duty with the militia, on recruiting duty, on courts-martial, boards, etc., will receive $48 per month more than a colonel or lieutenant-colonel, besides mileage for travel.

A brigadier-general assigned to any duty will receive his retired pay, $343.75, and mileage for travel performed under proper orders.

A colonel, lieutenant-colonel, or major, for all duty except with colleges, will receive the active pay and commutation of quarters of a major ($339.67 if he has had twenty years' service) and mileage. For college duty he will not receive commutation of quarters, $48 per month.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move the adoption of the amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 14, beginning with the word "Provided," in line 8, strike out the balance of line 8 and all of lines 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14 to and including the word "list," and insert:

"That a colonel or lieutenant-colonel heretofore or hereafter assigned to active duty shall hereafter receive the same pay and allowances as a retired major would receive under a like assignment."

Mr. HULL. The word "Provided" should be retained in the bill. It should be, strike out all after the word "Provided."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, does that affect officers below these two ranks?

Mr. HULL. Oh, no; not at all.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For additional pay to such officers, for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay, $5,250.

Mr. HULL. I move to strike out the word "officers," in line 10, and to insert the word "veterinarians." As a matter of fact, a veterinarian is not an officer. Therefore, the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Are veterinarians entitled to longevity pay?

Mr. HULL. Yes; they have all the rights of lieutenants in the Army except the rank.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Heretofore there has been no appropriation for this.

Mr. HULL. Because they have not served the five years until now in their new rank.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This will only be earned during the coming year?

Mr. HULL. This is simply an estimate of what will be earned during the fiscal year for which we are appropriating.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In that connection I wish to ask are dental surgeons also entitled to seniority pay?

Mr. HULL. No, sir; they are contract dental surgeons entirely.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I notice in one place you have thirty dental surgeons and in another place you have an appropriation for a number of contract surgeons.

Mr. HULL. The law authorizes the employment of thirty dental surgeons on the same terms that we employ contract surgeons. A dental surgeon is a contract dental surgeon and the others are contract surgeons in the active practice of medicine.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 15, line 10, strike out the word "officers" and insert "veterinarians."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For mileage to officers and contract surgeons when authorized by law, $450,000: Provided, That hereafter officers, active and retired, when traveling under competent orders without troops, shall be paid 7 cents per mile and no more; distances to be computed and mileage to be paid over the shortest usually traveled routes, with deduction as hereinafter provided; and payment and settlement of mileage accounts of officers shall be made according to distances and deductions computed over routes established and by mileage tables prepared by the Paymaster-General of the Army under the direction of the Secretary of War. The Secretary of War may determine what shall constitute travel and duty without troops within the meaning of the laws governing the payment of mileage and commutation of quarters to officers of the Army: Provided further, That officers who so desire may, upon application to the Quartermaster's Department, be furnished under their orders transportation requests for the entire journey by land, exclusive of sleeping and parlor car accommodations, or by water; and the transportation so furnished shall, if travel was performed under a mileage status, be a charge against the officer's mileage account, to be deducted at the rate of 3 cents per mile by the paymaster paying the account, and of the amount so deducted there shall be turned over to an authorized officer of the Quartermaster's Department 3 cents per mile for transportation furnished, except over any railroad which is a free or 50 per cent land-grant railroad, for the credit of the appropriation for the transportation of the Army and its supplies: And provided further, That when the established route of travel shall, in whole or in part, be over the line of any railroad on which the troops and supplies of the United States are entitled to be transported free of charge, or over any 50 per cent land-grant railroad, officers traveling as herein provided for shall, for the travel over such roads, be furnished with transportation requests, exclusive of sleeping and parlor car accommodations, by the Quartermaster's Department: And provided further, That when transportation is furnished by the Quartermaster's Department, or when the established route of travel is over any of the railroads above specified, there shall be deducted from the officer's mileage account by the paymaster paying the same 3 cents per mile for the distance for which transportation has been or should have been furnished: And provided further, That when the station of an officer is changed while he is on leave of absence he will on joining the new station be entitled to mileage for the distance to the new station from the place where he received the order directing the change, provided the distance be no greater than from the old to the new station; but if the distance be greater he will be entitled to mileage for a distance equal to that from the old to the new station only: And provided further, That for all sea travel actual expenses only shall be paid to officers, contract surgeons, contract dental surgeons, and veterinarians, to paymasters' clerks, and to the expert accountant of the Inspector-General's Department, when traveling on duty under competent orders, with or without troops; but for the purpose of determining allowances for all travel under orders, or for officers and enlisted men on discharge, travel in the Philippine Archipelago, the home waters of the United States, and between the United States and Alaska shall not be regarded as sea travel and shall be paid for at the rates established by law for land travel within the boundaries of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I wish to reserve a point of order on this paragraph, until I find out what new legislation is contained in it.

Mr. HULL. A great deal of this paragraph is the present law. The first change is the putting in of the words "and retired" in line 23, page 16. Then it is largely the present law, almost entirely so, down to the bottom of page 17. The reason for putting in the proviso leaving out the bond-aided roads, which is about the only change until you come down to the provisos, is that there are no bond-aided roads now that we make any deductions from. In other words, those that were bond aided have paid the debt to such an extent that the Government has taken a certain number of millions of their bonds as security and now pays them the full amount in place of deducting and applying it on their debt.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Does that apply to the Southern Pacific?

Mr. HULL. Yes; to the Southern Pacific and the Oregon Short Line and those lines out there.

The proviso on page 18, where the new legislation practically commences, is, beginning in line 14, that when the station of an officer is changed while he is on leave of absence he will on joining the new station be entitled to mileage for the distance to the new station from the place where he received the order directing the change, provided the distance be no greater than from the old to the new station; but if the distance be greater, he will be entitled to mileage, of course, equal to that from the old to the new station only. That is intended to cut off quite a charge upon the Government. Where officers about to be changed from one station to another get leave of absence and then get their mileage from the place where the order reaches them to their new station it makes a greater charge on the Treasury. This has added a great deal of expense to the Government on account of the increased amount paid out for mileage beyond what the committee believed should have been done. This provision simply limits it so that the mileage they receive will be no greater than it would have been if they had remained at their station and received their orders for the change and gone from the old station directly to the new. And it is a further provision, that if they are on leave of absence and take their orders while on leave, under no circumstances shall they receive an amount greater than the amount of mileage from the old station to the new.

This is expected to save a considerable sum out of this appropriation. Another provision there is in regard to sea travel. When the law was passed providing for sea travel, as we have it now, the committee understood that it would embrace all sea travel, but since that time a method has grown up of charging for the full mileage amount, in all sea travel except where the orders are direct from the United States to Manila or the Philippine Islands, and in that case they only get a dollar a day for subsistence while on the boat; but if ordered to Nagasaki, the officer gets mileage from San Francisco to Nagasaki; and if he is ordered to Manila by the way of Hongkong, he gets mileage for the entire distance. If he is ordered from here to Europe, he gets, under the present law, mileage for the whole distance. If he is ordered from here to Manila, by way of Europe, he gets a thousand dollars' mileage. We are trying to cut that off.

We had one illustration given us of a military information bureau officer being ordered to South America to investigate certain things there, and his total expense of the trip would have been about $160, as I remember it. He received about $500 for mileage. If this provision shall be incorporated in the bill, such cases as that will be impossible in the future. A man ordered to England or France—an officer on duty or a military attaché—would get only the actual transportation across the water.

The Paymaster estimates that if we put on this provision we shall save $50,000 out of this sum, and, in my judgment, with no injury to any officer of the Army, because if he is ordered from one place to another and gets his actual expenses he has certainly no cause to find fault with the Government.

In addition to the case of the officer, this peculiar situation was shown to be the fact—that the expert accountant and paymaster's clerks ordered to Manila under the present law would get transportation and 4 cents a mile for the whole distance, so that the paymaster's clerk traveling with the colonel of his corps, going in the same boat, ordered directly to Manila, would get his transportation from Washington to Manila, if here is where he started from, and 4 cents a mile in addition; so for 7,000 miles of sea travel it would be in the neighborhood of $280. As a matter of fact, the distance is great enough to give full $300. We want to cut that off, and so we put in this proviso restricting the paymaster's clerks and civil employees as well as officers that when traveling by sea they shall receive only actual expenses.

Mr. PALMER. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. PALMER. I do not understand it that way. The bill provides "that hereafter officers, active and retired, when traveling under competent orders without troops, shall be paid 7 cents per mile, and no more," and if the quartermaster furnishes the transportation they shall be charged 3 cents a mile, and that leaves 4 cents to the good.

Mr. HULL. And out of that he has to pay sleeping-car fare, his meals, and every other incidental expense of travel.

Mr. PALMER. That is supposed to cover all his other expenses?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. PALMER. In the second proviso you provide that the travel from the United States to the Philippine Islands shall not be considered as sea travel, but land travel.

Mr. HULL. Oh, no; I do not. Travel in the Philippine Archipelago shall not be considered sea travel. But to the Philippine Islands is sea travel.

Mr. PALMER. Between the United States and Alaska?

Mr. HULL. So far as Alaska is concerned, that is exempted; but not to the Philippines.

Mr. PALMER. Under this bill the officer will get his 7 cents a mile, less 3 cents for transportation furnished by the quartermaster, so that if he goes from here to Manila he gets 4 cents for every mile.

Mr. HULL. No; if he goes from here to San Francisco he gets 7 cents a mile and can buy his own ticket and pay all of his own expenses. From Manila to San Francisco he is allowed $1 a day on board transport.

Mr. PALMER. Where is that provision?

Mr. HULL. It provides that he shall have only actual expenses for all sea travel, and on the transport the only charge is $1 a day for subsistence.

Mr. PALMER. Would it not be better to provide instead of mileage to officers, contract surgeons, and so on, active and retired, when traveling without troops, that they should have their actual expenses instead of giving them 7 cents per mile?

Mr. HULL. That was the law for a good many years. In some parts of the country they got 10 cents a mile and actual expenses. It required an account of every penny paid out, and the estimate was that 7 cents a mile would not be any more charge upon the Government than the amount they received under the old law, and I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania will agree with me that except for the very long distances the 4 cents a mile saved on the cost will not pay the incidental expenses of travel.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question. In your efforts at economy, which, I think, are in the right line, how did it come that you asked for an increase of $50,000?

Mr. HULL. Because they have asked for a deficiency of over $50,000.

Mr. LITTAUER. Will not the new provisions have a considerable effect in the way of economy?

Mr. HULL. The Paymaster-General, in reply to a question of mine, said he believed that if we adopted this provision that we could at that time reduce the amount to $400,000, but the committee did not feel like adopting it.

Mr. LITTAUER. In what way has the necessity for this increased mileage arisen?

Mr. HULL. I think it has largely come from the abuses I have outlined. For instance, officers coming from here to Manila or going back to Manila, in place of being ordered to go to San Francisco, where there would be no mileage at all after reaching San Francisco, have been ordered by way of Europe from one point to another until they got to Manila.

Mr. LITTAUER. Under the new way, those abuses would be wiped out.

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. LITTAUER. Why would not $400,000 be sufficient?

Mr. HULL. My judgment is if we keep this in I will be willing enough to try it. I would be willing to reduce it to $400,000, but I would not reduce it a dollar unless this is put in.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does this include any class of men who are not now authorized to receive pay for mileage?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Clerks and inspectors-general.

Mr. HULL. They get their 4 cents a mile.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And this puts them on the same basis as officers?

Mr. HULL. No; this will give them the same provisions on land that the law now provides for them, but cuts them off so that when they go to Manila or cross the ocean they shall then only get their actual expenses, which saves at least $300 on every one of the paymaster's clerks and expert accountants that goes over.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the explanation is so satisfactory that I do not desire to press the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa withdraws his point of order.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, in order to put to a test the Paymaster's statement, I move to strike out the words "and fifty," in line 22, page 15, so that it will read "$400,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 16, line 22, strike out the words "and fifty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of enlisted men, $94,800.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, line 6, after the word "dollars," insert: "For relief of the widow and minor child of Capt. Charles W. Dakin, of the San Francisco fire department, who lost his life while fighting a fire on board of the United States Army transport Meade, $5,000. For relief of the widow and minor children of Thomas J. Hennessy, of the San Francisco fire department, who lost his life while fighting a fire on board of the United States Army transport Meade, $5,000."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against this amendment.

Mr. KAHN. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will reserve the point of order until I can explain this matter.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, on the night of the 31st of January last a fire broke out on the transport Meade. The vessel was to sail for Manila on the following day—on the 1st of February. The fire occurred in the hold, and these two members of the San Francisco fire department, with a number of other members of that department, went down into that hold and risked their lives in trying to save the property of the United States Government. As a matter of fact, Captain Dakin and Thomas Hennessy did lose their lives. They left families who were absolutely dependent upon them. The fire was within about 15 feet of the compartment where the combustibles on the Meade were stored, and if it had not been for the action of these men the possibility is that the fire would have reached this compartment, and the Meade would have been destroyed and dozens of other lives would have been wiped out by the catastrophe. I desire to read a letter which was submitted by General Funston to the War Department upon this subject. The letter is as follows:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF CALIFORNIA,
OFFICE OF THE COMMANDING GENERAL,
San Francisco, Cal., February 12, 1906.

THE MILITARY SECRETARY,
War Department, Washington, D. C.

SIR: During the disastrous fire that occurred on board the U. S. Army transport Meade, lying at her wharf in this city, early on the morning of the 1st instant, two members of the San Francisco fire department, Charles Dakin and Thomas J. Hennessy, lost their lives. These men, with a number of their comrades, had gone down into the hold of the ship and were making a heroic fight against the fire when they were overcome by smoke and gases and perished.

They met their deaths not from some untoward accident, but solely as a result of their heroism in sticking to their post in the presence of great and evident danger. Both left families in absolutely destitute circumstances—Dakin a widow, Frances Dakin, and a son 12 years of age, and Hennessy a widow, Ellen J. Hennessy, and three children, 4, 2, and 1 years of age, respectively.

While it is recognized that the families of these men have no legal claim against the United States, I desire to submit that it would be a very proper and graceful thing for Congress to recognize their heroic services by removing their families from the fear of want in the immediate future by an appropriation of $10,000 for the relief of the widow of each of the men named. The San Francisco fire department has on several occasions rendered highly valuable service during fires on the military reservations immediately contiguous to this city, and the present occasion gives an opportunity for the Government to recognize their services in a highly appropriate manner.

Very respectfully,

FREDERICK FUNSTON,
Brigadier-General, Commanding.

This letter was sent to the War Department here and was approved by the Quartermaster-General, and subsequently by the Lieutenant-General of the Army in the following words:

[Third indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF,
Washington, February 21, 1906.

Respectfully submitted to the honorable the Secretary of War, concurring in the recommendations of General Funston and the Quartermaster-General.

J. C. BATES,
Lieutenant-General, Chief of Staff.

Now, I submit, Mr. Chairman, that if these men had been sworn into the military service of the United States, and if they had lost their lives in that service, their widows and their orphans would have been entitled to and would undoubtedly have received pensions, but under the circumstances of this case there is no manner in which the families of these men can be provided for. I therefore sincerely hope that the gentleman from Alabama will withdraw his objection and allow the amendment to be inserted in the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California has undoubtedly made a splendid appeal for some of his gallant constituents, and I do not know but that after the case has been properly considered and looked into by the proper committee of this House they ought to receive proper compensation from the Government for the services they rendered in the fire that was about to destroy one of the Government transports. But, Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen on the other side of the House seem to overlook the fact that we on this side of the House represent a constituency; that we have claims of this kind, and many and many a time I have seen a bill of equal merit and equal claim to the one that the gentleman now offers on the floor of this House as an amendment to this bill, clearly out of order, clearly not in place here, objected to by the leaders on that side of the House. We have been told that if our constituents want anything there is a Claims Committee, and we can go to the Claims Committee, the proper committee to hear these matters. It was only last year when a claim was presented here on one of the appropriation bills from a young lady who was injured for life by the absolute carelessness of an elevator conductor in one of the Government buildings, and the chairman of the committee refused to allow it to stay on the bill.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman does not intend to convey the impression that that is an analogous case to this, where these men deliberately went down to the seat of danger in order to protect the property of the United States?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, well, it was a similar kind of a claim. Of course I recognize the fact that these constituents of yours were doing their duty, but they were paid to do that duty. As I understand it, the laws of your city very properly provide that they shall receive a pension from your city for the benefit they have rendered. I am not denying the proposition that it may be just to pay them more, and that they may be entitled to compensation from the Government of the United States, but I do say that we have a committee organized for that purpose, that it is their business, and every other Member of this House, no matter how meritorious his claim, is required to take those claims to the Committee on Claims for that committee to pass on and to be brought before this House. Now, the gentleman from California knows that. He knows that what he has proposed here is against the rules of the House. The rules of the House are always invoked to prevent Members on this side of the House from ever having a short road to get an appropriation for their constituency. And I am surprised that my friend from California should expect under these circumstances to have a matter of this kind go through by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to ask him two questions?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. A dozen, if my friend from Iowa desires it.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I want to ask him whether his information was that the San Francisco fire department was in the discharge of its duty as a fire department in San Francisco in fighting this fire in the harbor?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know those facts. If it was investigated by the proper committee, the Committee on Claims, we would have a report before this House giving all of those facts in a satisfactory manner.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I want to ask the gentleman one further question. If it be conceded that there be no legal claim against the Government of the United States and appeal is made to Congress for what is in the nature of a gratuity, not in a legal sense, but in consideration of valuable services rendered to the Government, and to encourage like efforts and sacrifices in the future, would the Committee on Claims then have jurisdiction at all in that kind of a case?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman knows that we have had a number of cases that were not legal claims. The old Ford's Theater claims were not legal claims against the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. I was going to suggest to the gentleman that in the first place this ship was not within the jurisdiction where the fire department of San Francisco operates. In the next place, the Committee on Claims, as I understand it, will not consider at the present time claims for personal injuries. But I agree with the statement of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] that this is not a legal claim against the Government. It is in the nature of a gratuity, and that is the only way it can be looked at.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think probably it is a gratuity. I have no doubt that the claims we paid to the persons who were hurt in the old Ford's Theater disaster were all gratuities. The claim that came before this House last year for the injury to a young lady employed in the Treasury building down here was a gratuity, and Congress has granted gratuities before.

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will allow me, I will ask if those people in Ford's Theater were engaged in saving the property of the United States? These men in San Francisco went down to save not only property but life.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman overlooks my proposition. I am not contending against the justice of compensating these gentlemen.

Mr. KAHN. There is no other way of doing it except by this kind of a bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, yes; there is. The last way this House provides for legislation of any kind is on an appropriation bill. If there is no other way to do it, then there is no way to do it here, because what the gentleman is seeking to do, and the gentleman knows it, is directly contrary to the rules of the House of Representatives. Now, there are committees that can consider this question and it is the proper way to legislate. I have no doubt that this is a proper case. Really, in my own mind, I have no doubt of it, but I have no real information on the question. I doubt if any other gentleman here has any real evidence or information as to what was done there, except what has appeared in the newspapers.

Mr. KAHN. Did the gentleman listen to the reading of General Funston's letter? He is in command there, and certainly would not make such a report to the Department unless he had fully informed himself upon the subject.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I supposed possibly he had. I do not deny that. But I say that a matter of this kind should be looked into by a proper committee. That is what the rules of this House require. That does not stop the gentleman's efforts to relieve his constituency, but it does prevent a precedent being made here for the next time that somebody has a claim to bring in here that has not properly been looked into, and not properly considered. And, Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much in a case of this kind, that naturally appeals to one's sympathy, to raise an objection; but I do insist that it will be very bad legislation to start the putting of damage claims on appropriation bills as a matter of sympathy. Therefore, I must insist on the objection I have made.

Mr. HAYES. I hope the gentleman will withhold his objection for a moment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. HAYES. I want to make a little additional statement to that made by my colleague. I want the gentleman to understand that this is not a legal claim against the United States.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I recognize that.

Mr. HAYES. There is no committee in this House, as I understand the rules, before which this claim can go. It must come in some such way as this if the widows and children of these men are to be provided for, and, as has already been stated, these men were not obliged to go to the place where this fire was. They were not paid for going there, as the gentleman states, at all. They were called upon as volunteers to go there and put out the fire in this ship belonging to the United States; that was not within the jurisdiction of the city of San Francisco, but in the bay, upon the waters of the bay of San Francisco. These men went there; they took their lives in their hands; they lost their lives. Now, as a matter of justice—I object to the proposition that it is a gratuity that we are asking of the Government of the United States, it is simply an act of justice.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HAYES. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Did these men go in this ship under the orders of the head of the fire department?

Mr. HAYES. Undoubtedly; but not subject to go.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And under such conditions would they not come within the regulations of the fire department of San Francisco——

Mr. HAYES. Undoubtedly.

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). Making provision for the families of men who lose their lives in the conduct of their work?

Mr. HAYES. It probably would; but the provision for the widows and children of men who lose their lives under such circumstances is very inadequate, and I think this is simply an act of justice.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know whether it is or not, because I do not know what provisions are made.

Mr. HAYES. I will state, as a matter of fact, that the provision that is made is very slight and inadequate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A good deal of this thing is like these appropriations for giving of medals of honor to people who have done deeds of conspicuous heroism, except we put this in the shape of money instead of in the shape of a medal.

Mr. HAYES. I presume it might have that appearance, but I want to state that——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I asked that question because I feel a very deep sympathy for these people myself, as far as I am personally concerned, and if the rules permit I expect they ought to be provided for.

Mr. HAYES. Now, the city government of San Francisco, or, rather, the board of fire commissioners, state the facts as they have already appeared. I do not want to take the time of the House, but it appears that the work of these men saved many hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of property of the United States that must otherwise inevitably have been destroyed. And if the Congress should see fit to adopt the amendment of my colleague, it would not only be an act of justice, but would be regarded as a recognition of the courage that these men displayed in going down into the hold of that ship and putting the fire out, saving the ship, and saving the other property that undoubtedly would have been destroyed by the explosion if the explosives in that boat had been set on fire.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many men lost their lives in that fire?

Mr. HAYES. Two men.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Firemen?

Mr. HAYES. The captain and one subaltern.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, your case is somewhat like those where in cities they have refused to make appropriations to pay the widows and orphans of the firemen who have lost their lives in putting out some very great conflagration.

Mr. HAYES. Yes, sir; I should say it is a recognition of their heroic conduct.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not know how it is about other cities that have failed to make the appropriation, but I know that I and others have contributed where the city has failed to do that. But there is another class of cases, of another kind from your proposition, and that is these elevator men here in our Government buildings and elsewhere in public buildings who have been injured by falling elevators, and things of that sort, and Congress has invariably refused to appropriate for it.

Mr. HAYES. But property of the United States was not saved thereby.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But your case is a much broader one, it seems to me, than the elevator cases.

Mr. HAYES. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman will yield to me, I do not look upon this matter as a claim at all.

Mr. HAYES. Not at all.

Mr. GROSVENOR. "Claim" means a claim. It has the quality of a demand, as a matter of law, or of right. Now, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] knows perfectly well that if he insists on this point of order it will have to be sustained, and that is an end to the doing of this righteous act that it seems to me the Government ought to be prompt to do. The gentleman from Alabama knows, when he says to take this to the Committee on Claims, that these bereaved widows and helpless orphans might as well forget that their fathers, their husbands, and their faithful men died in the service of the Government. They will get nothing. There is no such thing as getting that sort of a proposition through the Committee on Claims. It stands in the same relation to law and generosity as the $5,000 which we usually give to the widows of dead Congressmen and the funeral expenses and balance of a year's pay which we usually give the family of a dead Clerk or Doorkeeper of the House, a thing which we have done over and over again. It is upon the same footing precisely in principle, and it is not a gratuity in any proper sense. A gratuity means something for nothing. Here is a great Government, rich and powerful, that has benefited by the service of these two men, and now the question comes, shall those two widows and those children go to the poorhouse, or will this Government refuse and haggle over the question of immediate fairness? Oh, there is something so infinitely pitiable in such a proposition that I can not discuss it! [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD rose.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman makes any statement, I just want to state that the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] strikes me as not right. This case is analogous to one that happened in my own town, where a large brewery just outside of the city limits caught fire. The firemen were not obliged to respond to any call to put out the fire in that brewery, but when they were called upon they volunteered. They went out and put out the fire, and the brewery, more generous than the gentleman from Alabama would have this great Government be, responded without any request, and sent a generous check, although no loss of life had come, rewarding those firemen for their gallantry and their fearless fight with the flames.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the statement of the gentleman from California is not correct. I have not stated that I did not want these men rewarded.

Mr. HAYES. I did not wish to be understood as so stating.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understood you did.

Mr. HAYES. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will not insist on his point of order, but will let the House do what clearly ought to be done to relieve these orphans and widows.

Mr. Chairman, before I take my seat I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the fire commissioners of San Francisco may be spread upon the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked by the gentleman to print a certain document. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE BOARD OF FIRE COMMISSIONERS,
San Francisco, February 7, 1906.

Hon. E. A. HAYES,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: On February 2, 1906, the board of fire commissioners of the city and county of San Francisco, in regular session assembled, adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas on February 2, 1906, while engaged in the voluntary and purely patriotic service of saving one of our nation's transports, the Meade, from destruction by fire, two of the gallant members of this department heroically gave up their lives: Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the board of fire commissioners of the city and county of San Francisco does hereby place on record its testimonial to the bravery of Capt. Charles W. Dakin, of engine company No. 4, and Hoseman Thomas J. Hennessy, of engine company No. 22, and its sense of the loss to the department through the death of these two men; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Secretary of this commission extend to the families of the deceased its condolence in their bereavement; and be it further

"Resolved, That it is the sentiment of this board that it would be eminently proper and just for Congress to recognize the bravery and gallantry of the deceased by making some provision for their afflicted widows and orphaned children, and the president of this board, together with the chief engineer of the department, are herewith authorized and requested to make such representations to the National Government through Congressmen JULIUS KAHN and E. A. HAYES, of the Fourth and Fifth Congressional districts, as may best serve to bring needed relief to the distressed and afflicted families."

In accordance with said resolution, the undersigned respectfully bring to your attention the facts which led to the adoption of the resolution and the propriety of action by the Federal Government in the premises.

On Wednesday, January 31, a fire occurred upon the transport Meade, lying at the United States transport pier in the Bay of San Francisco. Notwithstanding the fact that the fire was outside of municipal jurisdiction, both as to the site of the fire and the location of the vessel, the fire department of San Francisco, with its usual bravery and heroism, responded to the call for aid and subdued the flames with much attendant danger and difficulty. In so doing, notwithstanding the exercise of the utmost care, the stifling fumes arising from the burning hold extinguished the lives of the two brave men whose names appear in the resolution, the subaltern losing his life in the vain endeavor to rescue his superior.

No more commendable acts of courage than those performed by these two men are recorded in the annals of local history.

Their death leaves dependent on public support two widows and four little children, entirely destitute of this world's goods. A charitable response has been made by the people of San Francisco for the temporary alleviation of their condition.

It would seem, under the circumstances, especially justifiable and proper to ask the Government of the United States to make some provision for the families of these deserving men, not only for the actual necessities which inspire this communication, but also as an encouragement for further and future deeds of valor on the part of the ever self-sacrificing membership of this department.

Therefore we respectfully, but earnestly, request you in suitable manner to present these suggestions to the proper authorities for attention and consideration.

Thanking you in advance for your courteous compliance with our request, we are, on behalf of the fire department of the city and county of San Francisco,

Very respectfully, yours,

H. M. WREDEN,
President Board of Fire Commissioners.
D. T. SULLIVAN,
Chief Engineer San Francisco Fire Department.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, in pressing this point of order, I wish to say that what the gentleman from Ohio says about this proceeding, insisting on the rules of the House, being contemptible, is no more so than the action of the gentleman from Ohio many and many a time on the floor of this House. No matter how good a bill has come to this House for a charity, for a good purpose, the gentleman from Ohio could never, and never has in the history of his twenty years' service on the floor of this House, been able to rise above partisanship—to recognize anything that ever came from this side of the House. And I say again, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman will allow me, will the gentleman name one fair southern war claim, college claim, claim for the relief of the Methodist Book Concern, or any other just claim that ever came from the South, that I defeated? If he can, I will resign my seat to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that his record is well known. I admit that he did support one of the college claims here from the South.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have supported more than twenty of the college claims.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But those claims came from the Committee on Claims. I have no objection to supporting this proposition, and have said so, if it goes to the proper Committee on Claims, is considered, and the matter looked into and determined legitimately, how much these people are entitled to.

I have just heard the amendment read at the desk. I have had no opportunity to investigate it, but I understand the gentleman asks for $5,000. Why should we give $5,000—I do not say it is a gratuity; the gentleman from California said it was a gratuity—but whether it be a gratuity or whether it be a claim, why should we give $5,000 to a widow for this service, no matter how valiant it may be, and only give $8 a month to the widow of a soldier killed in battle?

Mr. KAHN. The $8 a month rises into the thousands of dollars as the years go on. Here is a widow with children. I believe the children in one case range from 1 to 4 years of age, to be taken care of, to be reared and brought up and educated.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not arguing against the legitimacy of this claim.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order, and I would like the opinion of the Chair whether this discussion is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made by the gentleman from Alabama, and all discussion that does not relate to the point of order is by unanimous consent. The Chair is prepared to rule on the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama a question. Does not this stand upon a somewhat different basis in this, that but for this San Francisco fire department this very valuable United States transport ship would have been destroyed? Is not there a sort of quantum meruit in this; is it a mere gratuity? Has not the United States Government received a magnificent return already?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have not asserted that it was a gratuity.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this debate has run longer than it should, and I insist that it be confined to the question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, Mr. Chairman, I desire to confine myself to the question. I have yielded to interruptions and I merely wish to answer my colleague.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that he is prepared to rule upon the point of order made by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Chair is ready to rule, I have nothing further to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LARRINAGA. Mr. Chairman, I was about to rise when the Clerk finished reading the paragraph on the Porto Rican regiment, but the gentleman from California was before me with his amendment, and I had to yield. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few remarks on the provision of that bill relating to the Porto Rican regiment, as I do not know whether I shall be here when the matter comes again before the House or not. I am aware, Mr. Chairman, of the peculiar circumstances under which the Commissioner from Porto Rico rises on the floor of this House to speak in behalf of his country. I know full well that it is only through the courtesy of its Members that I am allowed to speak on the floor of this House. You will appreciate, therefore, the great difficulty and the unfavorable circumstances under which I labor when I rise to say anything on matters pertaining to Porto Rico.

The last time the question relating to the Porto Rican regiment came before this House there was a great controversy as to whether the regiment should be mustered out or should be retained. The news reached Porto Rico, and I tell you, gentlemen, that a great sorrow pervaded the whole island when it was learned that there was a movement on foot to muster out that regiment. It is a matter of sentiment, Mr. Chairman, but as Mr. Wilson, an able American writer who for many years was in Porto Rico, said in his book, Political Development of Porto Rico, "sentiment is a power in Porto Rico."

There are two reasons, Mr. Chairman, why this regiment should be kept in the American Army. The first is that that body of troops is not a useless factor in the American Army. On the contrary, it is, in my opinion, a very effective military unit in the Army as it now stands.

In the next place, these Porto Rican soldiers have been trained and instructed by able, capable, and gallant American officers, and have become a very effective body of troops.

Now, Mr. Chairman, at every moment I am brought face to face with matters that I feel it is not proper for me to touch, and I trust that the kindness and courtesy of the House will overlook any error that I may commit in this line. It is impossible to deal with certain topics without touching many other matters relating to it; but I wish to say that this subject of the Porto Rico regiment is connected with the present policy of the United States. But taking the facts as they are; starting from the basis that the United States has adopted a policy of expansion; that it has taken Porto Rico, has interfered to put order in financial matters in Santo Domingo, having made Cuba a free and independent nation, and having in general paved the way for that great enterprise of the Panama Canal, it seems to me that this Porto Rican regiment is destined to be a useful military unit, one that can not be replaced by any equal body of troops from the Northern States.

To show that clearly, Mr. Chairman, I will mention some of the circumstances occurring in the case. Those soldiers have already been trained, as I said before. They are the most sober body of soldiers that you can get anywhere in the world. They are hardy, and to appreciate them properly you should see them marching up those hills every year. Those men are immune to all the climatic influences of tropical countries. They all speak the Spanish language, which is the language of all the South American northern border of the Caribbean Sea and of the border of the Gulf of Mexico and the West India Islands. Those soldiers have a military record behind them. Every one of you gentlemen knows that a bucket of water at the proper time will stop a fire which, if allowed to continue, would destroy a whole building or perhaps end in the conflagration of a whole city; and I say, Mr. Chairman, that that body of troops in Porto Rico, like the bucket of water, would serve to stop at its inception any difficulty which might arise on the Panama Canal or other neighboring place.

Those men are loyal and have always been loyal and true. That regiment in two hours can be placed on board of any United States transport and be sailing for any port on the Gulf of Mexico or the West Indies and arrive there a week ahead of any troops which could be sent down from the United States. This Government has undertaken the task of digging the Panama Canal, and it has invited the nations of the world to steam through that channel, and it is proper for this country to keep the vestibule of that corridor in good order and in proper shape, as it has already begun to do it. The United States can not shirk from the responsibility that it has assumed. That great and glorious work, which in my professional studies I have followed with special interest from its very inception, is not beyond the intelligence, the resources, and the power of this country, and it can be completed sooner than many people think, sooner than even many technical men have said, if the proper methods are used and adequate means are furnished to the efficient push of the President. Porto Rico stands in the front, at the entrance of that canal, and every ship coming from Europe or even from your own country north of Hampton Roads will have to go close to our shores through the Mona Passage. There in the middle of the channel stands the little island of Mona, with the beacon of its lights that will show to the whole world the way to the Panama Canal. Porto Rico is one of the best illuminated islands in the world, and each ship coming from Europe will sight one of its fifteen lights. The first light seen will, by its flashes, by the color of the light, by the intervals of the revolutions tell the ship on which point of the sea she is, and from there be guided as by the hand clear into the Caribbean Sea and to the Panama Canal.

I have not the time, Mr. Chairman, to finish my remarks, so I shall press on to the end. In closing, I wish to say of that Porto Rican regiment that it has a clear, clean military record behind it. In the sixteenth century they fought against the English for their country. In the seventeenth century they fought the Dutch and the French, and in the eighteenth century—in 1797—when Lord Abercrombie landed 7,000 troops in Porto Rico to take the island in the name of the King of England, it was the Porto Rican militia that went to fight the British troops and not the Spanish soldiers, because there were none in the island. Every one of these boys, when he goes to his home in the high mountains, hears the story of his forefathers who fought the enemies of their country. When that boy goes into his home the family is proud of him, and all the neighbors gather around to see him and hear the old tales recounted. Therefore they have before them something to live up to—a record of honor.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if that Porto Rican regiment were to be disbanded and the news were to reach Porto Rico, the last lingering hope to get right and justice from the United States would disappear from the country. Our people has been given an organic law that we do not want. You have given us an organic law that we think was not fair to give to a people with a civilization four hundred years old, but when we saw that you gave us that Porto Rican regiment, because we were patriotic we did not lose hope. If you strike that Porto Rican regiment off, if you muster it out, our people will think that the last hope has vanished for a better future. We hope that you will soon amend the Foraker Act and we hope also that you will not disband—that you will not muster out our dear Porto Rican regiment. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. OTJEN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution:

House concurrent resolution No. 22.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the action of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and of the Vice-President of the United States and President of the Senate in signing the enrolled bill H. R. 297—"An act to authorize the construction of dams and power stations on the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals, Alabama"—be rescinded, and that in the reenrollment of the bill the following amendments be made:

Amend section 1 of the enrolled bill by striking out, after the word "elect," at the end of line 5, section 1, page 1, the following: "between the mouth of Malletts Creek on the east, and" in line 6 of said section, and insert in lieu thereof "and the Secretary of War may approve between a point on the southern side of the river opposite to or below the head or opening of the canal constructed by the United States on the north side of the river, on the east, and." Insert after the word "River," in line 10 of said section 1, page 1, the following: "between the two points above mentioned." Amend by adding after the word "War," in line 13 of said section 1, page 1, of said enrolled bill, the following: "for the protection of navigation and the property and other interests of the United States," so that said section 1 of the enrolled bill when amended will read as follows:

16, township 3, range 10 on the west, for the purpose of erecting, operating, and maintaining power station and to maintain inlet and outlet races or canals and to make such other improvements on the southern bank of the Tennessee River, between the two points above mentioned, as may be necessary for the development of water power and the transmission of the same, subject always to the provisions and requirements of this act, and to such conditions and stipulations as may be imposed by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War for the protection of navigation and the property and other interests of the United States."

Amend section 2, page 1, of said enrolled bill by striking out, after the word "Canal," in line 25, page 1, of said section, all down to and including the word "River," in line 25 of said section 2. Amend said section 2, page 1, of the enrolled bill, by striking out after the word "Canal," in line 28, page 1, all down to and including the word "River," in line 29, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "or the Tennessee River," so that said section 2 of the enrolled bill, as amended, will read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That detailed plans for the construction and operation of a dam or dams and other appurtenant and necessary works shall be submitted by the person, company, or corporation desiring to construct the same to the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, with a map showing the location of such dam or other structures with such topographical and hydrographic data as may be necessary for a satisfactory understanding of the same, which must be approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War before work can be commenced on said dam or dams or other structures; and after such approval of said plans no deviation whatsoever therefrom shall be made without first obtaining the approval of the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War: Provided, That the constructions hereby authorized do not interfere with the navigation of Muscle Shoals Canal or the navigation of the Tennessee River: And provided further, That said dam or dams and works shall be limited only to the use of the surplus water of the river not required for the navigation of the Muscle Shoals Canal or the Tennessee River, and that no structures shall be built and no operations conducted by those availing themselves of the provisions of this act which shall injure or interfere with the navigation of the Muscle Shoals Canal or impair the usefulness of any improvement made by the Government in the interest of navigation."

Amend section 3, page 2, of said enrolled bill by striking out all after the word "otherwise," in line 17 of said section 3, page 2, down to and including the word "damage," at the end of line 18 of said section and page, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "in a court of competent jurisdiction," so that said section 3 of said enrolled bill, after being so amended, will read:

"SEC. 3. That the Government of the United States reserves the right, at any time that the improvement of the navigation of the Tennessee River demands it, to construct, maintain, and operate, in connection with any dam or other works built under the provisions of this act, suitable lock or locks or any other structures for navigation purposes, and at all times to control such dam or dams or other structures, and the level of the pool caused by such dam or dams, to such an extent as may be necessary to provide facilities for navigation; and whenever Congress shall authorize the construction of such lock or other structures, the person, company, or corporation owning and controlling such dam or dams or other structures shall convey to the United States, under such terms as Congress shall prescribe, titles to such land as may be required for the use of such lock and approaches, and in addition thereto shall grant to the United States, free of cost, the free use of water power for building and operating such constructions: Provided also, That the person, company, or corporation building, maintaining, or operating any dam or dams or other structures under the provisions of this act shall be liable for any damage that may be inflicted thereby upon private property, either by overflow or otherwise, in a court of competent jurisdiction. The person, company, or corporation owning or operating any such dam shall maintain, at their own expense, such lights and other signals thereon and such fishways as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall prescribe."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolutions:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 13.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 10,000 extra copies of the testimony taken by the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce in the consideration of the so-called "railroad rates bill," 3,000 for the use of the Senate and 7,000 for the use of House of Representatives.

Senate concurrent resolution No. 12.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 10,000 extra copies of the digest prepared under the direction of the committee of the testimony taken by the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce in the consideration of the so-called "railroad rates bill," 3,000 for the use of the Senate, and 7,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For amount due certain Philippine scouts from Lieut. Andrus Shea, Philippine Scouts, to whom the amount was intrusted at St. Louis, Mo., and who absconded with the money, $1,722.50.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order against this paragraph. It is not authorized by existing law, it changes existing law, and it is not within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs to report the item.

Mr. HULL. I understand, Mr. Chairman, the point of order is on page 21, "Amount due certain Philippine scouts." There is no question but the point is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. OLMSTED). The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter the annual compensation of officers, agents, and employees of the United States for services rendered shall be divided into twelve equal installments, one of which shall be the pay for each calendar month; and in making payments for a fractional part of a month one-thirtieth of one of such installments or of a monthly compensation shall be the rate to be paid for each day. For the purpose of computing such compensation each and every month shall be held to consist of thirty days, without regard to the actual number of days in any month, thus excluding the thirty-first day of any month from the computation and treating February as if it actually had thirty days; and any person entering the military or naval service of the United States during a thirty-one day month shall be entitled to pay from the date of entry to the 30th day of said month, both days inclusive, and no more; and any person so entering said service during the month of February shall be entitled to one month's pay, less as many thirtieths thereof as the number of days that may have elapsed during that month prior to the date of his entry: Provided, That for one day's unauthorized absence on the 31st day of any month one day's pay shall be forfeited.

Mr. HULL. On this proposition of annual compensation of officers and agents I have had drawn up quite a lengthy argument here by the Pay Department of the Army, and that, with an amendment—striking the word "civil" out of the amendment—has been submitted to the gentleman from Iowa, a member of the Appropriations Committee. I will ask now to have read first the paper which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For more than fifty years the Army was paid on a basis of thirty days constituting a month, this disposition of time being confirmed by Second Comptrollers Brodhead and Upton and adhered to by all succeeding Comptrollers. (See Dig. 2d Comp. Dec., ed. 1869, pars. 531–534, and vol. 2, Dig. 2d Comp. Dec., pars. 1142 and 1146.)

The Army Regulations of 1901 and many prior years copied almost the exact wording of Comptroller Brodhead's decision (par. 534 above referred to) into the following paragraph:

"733. When applicable, the following rules for the computation of time in payment for services will be observed:

"(1) For any full calendar month's service, at a stipulated monthly rate of compensation, payment will be made at such stipulated rate, without regard to the number of days in that month.

"(2) When service commences on an intermediate day of the month, thirty days will be assumed as the length of the month, whatever be the number of days therein.

"(3) When the service terminates on an intermediate day of the month, the actual number of days during which service was rendered in that calendar month will be allowed.

"(4) When the service embraces two or more months or parts of months but one fraction will be made, thus: From September 21 to November 25, inclusive, will be calculated—September 21 to October 20, inclusive, one month; from October 21 to November 20, inclusive, one month; from November 21 to 25, inclusive, five days; making the time allowed two months and five days.

"(5) When two fractions of months occur and both are less than a whole month, as from August 21 to September 10, the time will be determined thus: August 21 to 30, inclusive (ignoring the 31st), ten days; from September 1 to 10, inclusive, ten days; making the time allowed twenty days.

"(6) Service commencing in February will be calculated as though the month contained thirty days, thus: From February 21 to 28 (or 29), inclusive, ten days. When the service commences on the 28th day of that month, three days will be allowed, and if on the 29th, two days.

"(7) If service commences on the 31st day of any month, payment will not be made for that day.

"(8) For commutation of subsistence and for services of persons employed at a per diem rate payment will be made for the actual number of days.

"(9) When services are rendered from one given date to another the account will state clearly whether both dates are included.

"(10) In computing the wages of persons employed at a per diem allowance the day on which service begins and the day on which it ends will be allowed in the computation."

In order to have legislative sanction for the above method of payment, the following provision was inserted in the Army appropriation act of March 2, 1903 (32 Stat., 934):

"Hereafter in all payments to be made under the provisions of Army appropriation acts, when the rate of compensation is annual, payment shall be made monthly at the rate of one-twelfth of the annual rate, and of such monthly rate and of all other monthly rates of compensation one-thirtieth shall be the daily rate for compensation of pay for fractional parts of a month; and for the purposes of this act each and every month shall be held to consist of thirty days, whether the actual number of days be greater or less."

With the intention of placing all civilian employees on the same basis with the Army regarding the computation of time, the following provision was inserted in the sundry civil act of April 28, 1905 (33 Stat., 513):

"SEC. 4. That the annual compensation of officers, agents, and employees of the United States for services rendered subsequent to June 30, 1904, shall be divided into twelve equal installments, one of which shall be the pay for each calendar month; and in making payments for a fractional part of a month, one-thirtieth of one of such installments, or of a monthly compensation, shall be the rate to be paid for each day. For the purpose of computing such compensation each and every month shall be held to consist of thirty days, without regard to the actual number of days in any month, thus excluding the 31st day of any month from the computation, and treating February as if it actually had thirty days."

The following decision of the Comptroller, dated June 14, 1904, is published in War Department circular No. 33 of that year:

"These two provisions concerning the method of computing pay are substantially alike. Each provides for exactly the same method of computation and is simply the same thing expressed in language somewhat different, but meaning exactly the same thing. Each makes provision for payments of annual and monthly salaries and compensations where the service is continuous during any given month in a year, and treats each month, regardless of its number of days, as thirty days in duration. Each likewise makes provision for the payment of such salaries or compensation where the service is not continuous during any particular month, and each provides that in such case the person so serving a fractional part of a month shall be paid for such service at the rate of one-thirtieth of the monthly salary or compensation for each of said day's service."

Since that date there have been more than forty published decisions of the Comptroller on the subject, many of them in conflict with others, and most of them at variance with the long established method of computations for Army payments. In some instances, following these decisions, an injustice is done the officer or soldier, while at other times he receives more than he has earned. In other words, the Comptroller has construed these laws to mean that thirty days constitute a month for the purpose of establishing a daily rate of pay for less than a month's service under any one appointment; but in computation of time for services rendered, the actual number of days in each month must be considered. This, in spite of the fact that the law says "each and every month shall be held to consist of thirty days."

EXAMPLES.

1. An officer, soldier, or civil employee, entering the service on February 28, 1905, received but one day's pay for February. The soldier will, therefore, have received pay to the expiration of his three-year enlistment, for two years, eleven months and twenty-eight days only.

2. On the other hand, if an officer, soldier, or civil employee enters the service on March 2 he receives a full month's pay, and the soldier, at the expiration of his three-year enlistment, will have received pay for three years and one day's service.

3. If the soldier mentioned in No. 1 is discharged on February 27, 1908, and reenlists February 28 he will lose one day's pay (as February, 1908, will contain twenty-nine days). Although his service will have been continuous and he will be discharged for expiration of term of service, yet the Comptroller holds that he begins to serve under a new contract on February 28 and must be paid for each service under the rule for fractional parts of a month.

4. The above applies also to soldiers discharged "for the good of the service," in order that they may be reenlisted the next day for a tour of duty in the Philippine Islands.

5. The same rule applies to court-martial forfeitures if they become affective on an intermediate day of a month—which method is clumsy and confusing and entirely unnecessary—while if the soldier is discharged before the forfeitures are collected, he gains or loses thereby according to the months involved in the transaction.

There has been a new decision in a Navy case which makes the same rule apply to commutation of quarters.

6. The question of promotion and reduction of an officer, enlisted man, or civil employees is one of the grossest misinterpretations of the intent of Congress of any of the Comptroller's numerous decisions. In a continuous service of twenty, thirty, or forty years, each time a man shall have a change in grade he may gain a day's pay, or lose one or two days, as the case may be, viz:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| A brigadier-general's pay for one month is | $458.33 | |
| If promoted to major-general February 28, he receives | 433.00 | |
| Thus losing by his promotion | | $25.00 |
| If promoted March 1, he receives pay for March of | $625.00 | |
| If promoted March 2, he receives pay for March of | 640.28 | |
| Thus gaining by one day's delay in promotion | | 15.28 |
| Or gaining by two days' delay in promotion (from February 28) | | 40.28 |
| A private's pay on first entry into the service is | | 13.00 |
| If promoted to corporal February 28, he receives pay for February | | 12.20 |
| If promoted to corporal March 1, he receives pay for March | | 15.00 |
| If promoted to corporal March 2, he receives pay for March | | 15.43 |
| If reduced from corporal March 1, he receives pay for March | | 13.00 |
| If reduced from corporal March 2, he receives pay for March | | 13.50 |
| If reduced from corporal February 1, he receives pay for February | | 13.00 |
| If reduced from corporal February 2, he receives pay for February | | 12.20 |

The same rule of course applies to civil employees paid from Army appropriations and those in the Executive Departments, even to the transfer of what was known as "temporary clerks, War Department," to the permanent roll, under the legislative act of February 3, 1905 (33 Stat., 659) about which the Comptroller said (11 Comp., 485):

"Such transfer involves a different appropriation, and service in each position would represent service in a distinct position from service in the other and would involve a new appointment. The payments involved therefore represent payments for fractional parts of a month within the meaning of the act of April 28, 1904."

Yet these clerks were not promoted, nor transferred, nor their work changed in the slightest degree, but they were given a new appointment and took a new oath of office.

It would therefore seem wise that the following provision should be inserted in the Army appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907.

During the reading of the above,

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the Clerk to waive the reading of the argument. I think it will only be necessary to place that in the RECORD, so everybody can see the full argument and reason for it, and I now move to strike out all on page 21, commencing with the word "hereafter," in line 8, down to and including the word "forfeited," on page 22, and insert the following, which has been agreed upon.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 21, after line 7, insert:

"Hereafter, where the compensation of any person in the military service of the United States is annual or monthly the following rules for division of time and computation of pay for services rendered are hereby established:

"Annual compensation shall be divided into twelve equal installments, one of which shall be the pay for each calendar month; and in making payments for a fractional part of a month one-thirtieth of one of such installments, or of a monthly compensation, shall be the daily rate of pay. For the purpose of computing such compensation and for computing time for services rendered during a fractional part of a month in connection with annual or monthly compensation, each and every month shall be held to consist of thirty days, without regard to the actual number of days in any calendar month, thus excluding the 31st of any calendar month from the computation and treating February as if it actually had thirty days. Any person entering the service of the United States during a thirty-one-day month and serving until the end thereof shall be entitled to pay for that month from the date of entry to the thirtieth day of said month, both days inclusive; and any person entering said service during the month of February and serving until the end thereof shall be entitled to one month's pay, less as many thirtieths thereof as there were days elapsed prior to date of entry: Provided, That for one day's unauthorized absence on the thirty-first day of any calendar month, one day's pay shall be forfeited."

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

All the money hereinbefore appropriated for pay of the Army and miscellaneous shall be disbursed and accounted for by officers of the Pay Department as pay of the Army, and for that purpose shall constitute one fund.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 22, line 5, after the word "appropriated," insert "except the appropriation for mileage of officers and contract surgeons when authorized by law."

Mr. HULL. I have no objection to that at all.

Mr. TAWNEY. The purpose of that is to keep out of this appropriation of pay of the Army the mileage for officers and contract surgeons.

Mr. HULL. I have no objection.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Encampment of organized militia with troops of the Regular Army.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. When this question was discussed in my opening remarks, made in the House when this bill was first considered, I inserted, when referring to the encampments, some remarks on our foreign affairs and an article from a paper published in China giving the statement that the minister of the United States at Peking had voluntarily given out the fact that the United States proposed to reimburse, or rather return to the Chinese Government, the money received for the Boxer indemnity. Since that time I have had a letter from the Secretary of State stating that the minister at Peking had positively denied ever having had such an interview, and I want to make the statement here that his denial has taken away the criticism that I made upon his action at that time, and I want to make it as public as I made my remarks before in publishing an article which appeared in a paper from China. The fact, however, still remains that this interview was published all over the Orient, and, in my judgment, should have been contradicted through the same sources, so that the Orientals themselves would know that the minister representing this country had been misquoted. I have no information that such denial has ever been made there.

I have an extract from the Daily Record of Yokohama where the Japanese criticised action on the part of this Government looking to a return of any part of the Boxer indemnity. Among other things it says:

And would it be a politic act or an act calculated to inure to the common benefit of the nations that the United States Government should sever itself from the association of powers which, in 1900, stood up for the principle that no movement for the forcible expulsion of foreigners from Chinese territory will be tolerated by the Occident?

It then goes on and criticises the proposition as contained in the supposed interview with our minister. Therefore I say it would have been better if he had come, as we do in this country, through the press to contradict any assertion that he had ever made such a proposition. I assumed that in that country papers were more careful and had less license to publish fictitious interviews than they have here. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that I was mistaken, and I regret that I put in any criticism of Minister Rockhill in this proposition, while I might be disposed to criticise him for many others.

The Clerk read as follows:

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

Regular supplies: Regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department, including their care and protection, consisting of stoves and heating apparatus required for heating offices, hospitals, barracks and quarters, and recruiting stations; also ranges and stoves, and appliances for cooking and serving food, and repair and maintenance of such heating and cooking appliances; of fuel and lights for enlisted men, including recruits, guards, hospitals, storehouses, and offices, and for sale to officers, and including also fuel and engine supplies required in the operation of modern batteries at established posts; for post bakeries; for ice machines and their maintenance where required for the health and comfort of the troops and for cold storage; for the necessary furniture, text-books, paper, and equipment for the post schools and libraries; for the tableware and mess furniture for kitchens and mess halls, each and all for the enlisted men, including recruits; of forage in kind for the horses, mules, and oxen of the Quartermaster's Department at the several posts and stations and with the armies in the field, and for the horses of the several regiments of cavalry, the batteries of artillery, and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted, and for the authorized number of officers' horses, including bedding for the animals; and nothing in the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1906, or any other act, shall hereafter be held or construed so as to deprive officers of the Army, wherever on duty in the military service of the United States, of forage, bedding, shoeing, or shelter for their authorized number of horses, or of any means of transportation or maintenance therefor for which provision is made by the terms of this act; of straw for soldiers' bedding, and of stationery, including blank books for the Quartermaster's Department, certificates for discharged soldiers, blank forms for the Pay and Quartermaster's departments, and for printing department orders and reports, $5,000,000: Provided, That no part of the appropriations for the Quartermaster's Department shall be expended on printing unless the same shall be done by contract after due notice and competition, except in such cases as the emergency will not admit of the giving notice of competition, and in cases where it is impracticable to have the necessary printing done by contract the same may be done, with the approval of the Secretary of War, by the hire of the necessary labor for the purpose. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, whenever the ice machines, steam laundries, and electric plants shall not come in competition with private enterprise for sale to the public, and in the opinion of the Secretary of War it becomes necessary to the economical use and administration of such ice machines, steam laundries, and electric plants as have been or may hereafter be established in pursuance of law, surplus ice may be disposed of, laundry work may be done for other branches of the Government, and surplus electric light and power may be sold on such terms and in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the funds received from such sales and in payment for such laundry work shall be used to defray the cost of operation of said ice, laundry, and electric plants; and the sales and expenditures herein provided for shall be accounted for in accordance with the methods prescribed by law, and any sums remaining, after such cost of maintenance and operation have been defrayed, shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation from which the cost of operation of such plant is paid.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to have some explanation of that most extraordinary authority contained in this paragraph for the Secretary of War to sell the electric power and ice and run laundries for the general public.

Mr. HULL. The Secretary does not do that. This provision was put in last year, and is continued here. It provides that they are not to come into competition with the public, but in many places on the frontier the Secretary of War can dispose of some light to the great advantage of the small villages and settlers in the neighborhood of the post. There are places where the Army provides for ice where there is no other ice within a hundred or two hundred miles from the place the Government makes it. In many cases the people may want to buy a little for the sick. It is clearly understood and defined that in no case is the Government to enter into any of this work where there is the slightest competition by private enterprise.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It seems to me the one objection to the provision is——

Mr. HULL. As to the laundry, I would say, without some provision of this kind the Army could not wash the linen for the hospitals.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman will allow me a word I would say this: That he need not put in any proposition against interfering with private enterprise. If you allow a fellow to try one of those laundries once, as we did over in the Philippine Islands, he will never go back a second time.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is possible. But the provision does not limit the power in the matter explained by the chairman of the committee. And then, it seems to me, too, that if the Government shall establish ice plants and laundries and electric light and power plants authorized to serve the public that there never will be any private competition; that if communities can secure these advantages from the War Department, why, there will be no motive and nothing to prompt them from ever establishing plants of that character to supply themselves by private enterprise.

Mr. HULL. Still the Government is not engaged in this business at any place where there is any considerable number of people. The Government, in that case, would buy its ice in preference to supplying a plant in places so situated where it could possibly get the ice. Take the laundry business. The Government never does any laundry work for outside private citizens. It never has. It could not even do the washing for the hospital without this provision being put in, so we are told.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have heard of no abuse of this power, and of course I do not propose to object to it.

Mr. HULL. If I had those old hearings, I could convince the gentleman that there can be no abuse of it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman is practically convinced of it. It struck me, however, that it was an extraordinary thing for the Government to do to go into the laundry business for the public.

Mr. HULL. It is not for the public. It is only for itself.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to strike out, on page 26, line 10, the word "six" and insert the word "seven."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 26, line 10, strike out the word "six" and insert the word "seven."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Incidental expenses: Postage; cost of telegrams on official business received and sent by officers of the Army; extra pay to soldiers employed on extra duty, under the direction of the Quartermaster's Department, in the erection of barracks, quarters, and storehouses, in the construction of roads and other constant labor for periods of not less than ten days, and as clerks for post quartermasters at military posts, and for prison overseers at posts designated by the War Department for the confinement of general prisoners; for expenses of expresses to and from frontier posts and armies in the field, of escorts to paymasters and other disbursing officers, and to trains where military escorts can not be furnished; expenses of the interment of officers killed in action or who die when on duty in the field, or at military posts or on the frontiers, or when traveling under orders, and of noncommissioned officers and soldiers; and in all cases where such expenses would have been lawful claims against the Government, reimbursement may be made of expenses heretofore or hereafter incurred by individuals of burial and transportation of remains of officers, including acting assistant surgeons, not to exceed the amount now allowed in the cases of officers, and for the reimbursement in the cases of enlisted men not exceeding the amount now allowed in their cases, may be paid out of the proper funds appropriated by this act, and the disbursing officers shall be credited with such reimbursement heretofore made; but hereafter no reimbursement shall be made of such expenses incurred prior to the 21st day of April, 1898; authorized office furniture, hire of laborers in the Quartermaster's Department, including the hire of interpreters, spies, or guides for the Army; compensation of clerks and other employees to the officers of the Quartermaster's Department, and incidental expenses of recruiting; for the apprehension, securing, and delivering of deserters, including escaped military prisoners, and the expenses incident to their pursuit, and no greater sum than $50 for each deserter or escaped military prisoner shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be paid to any civil officer or citizen for such services and expenses; for a donation of $5 to each dishonorably discharged prisoner upon his release from confinement, under court-martial sentence, involving dishonorable discharge; for the following expenditures required for the several regiments of cavalry, the batteries of light artillery, and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted, the authorized number of officers' horses, and for the trains, to wit: Hire of veterinary surgeons, purchase of medicines for horses and mules, picket ropes, blacksmith's tools and materials, horseshoes and blacksmith's tools for the cavalry service, and for the shoeing of horses and mules, and such additional expenditures as are necessary and authorized by law in the movements and operations of the Army, and at military posts, and not expressly assigned to any other department, $1,750,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the attention of the chairman of the committee to this paragraph: I see on page 28, commencing with line 7, there is a provision made for extra pay to soldiers employed, extra pay for certain purposes, included "in the construction of roads and other constant labor," etc., and then on page 33 of the bill, in the item for transportation of the Army and its supplies, there is also provision made for the payment of extra-duty pay of enlisted men for certain purposes, including "opening of roads and building wharves."

Now, is the chairman of the committee able to state what part of both of these appropriations is paid as extra pay to men employed in the construction of or opening roads?

Mr. HULL. I should say the latter provision would be governed partly by the use of the extra pay. No doubt that the other provision is of little value, because the Army is not on the move, and they are not having to make many improvements that are made when they are on the march. There may be some in connection with being in camps this year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The criticism I would make is that there are two appropriations—one for incidental expenses, the other for the transportation of the Army and its supplies—and the language in both provisions authorizes extra-duty pay for men employed in the construction of roads.

Mr. HULL. I do not know that I could answer any clearer than I have. I can only say this—that in the exigencies of the past they have used some extra-duty pay for matters outside of the post and in the post. They clearly have the right, and it is the duty, to make roads within post grounds at all times. They get extra pay for working on these roads or for extra work of any kind; but the same man does not get extra-duty pay out of each of these appropriations for the same work.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand that; but under the language in the two provisions it makes it possible to utilize either appropriation.

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. For the same purpose?

Mr. HULL. I should imagine that was true. I have not had my attention called to it. It is simply following the language in the Army appropriation bill as it has been for years—I should say for twenty-five or thirty years, possibly continuously for more than that. My attention was never called to it before. I will only say to the gentleman that I will try and remember it the next time and ask them why it should be placed in here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The reason I call attention to that is this: That when we come to this other provision, I wish to call attention to some of the purposes to which the appropriation for transportation has been applied. I find, however, that not only this appropriation is used in the construction of roads, but the appropriation for incidental supplies is available for the same purpose.

Mr. HULL. I should imagine it would be.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Barracks and quarters: For barracks and quarters for troops, storehouses for the safe-keeping of military stores, for offices, recruiting stations, and for the hire of buildings and grounds for summer cantonments, and for temporary buildings at frontier stations, for the construction of temporary buildings and stables, and for repairing public buildings at established posts, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on the same: Provided, That no part of the moneys so appropriated shall be paid for commutation of fuel or for quarters to officers or enlisted men: Provided further, That the number of and total sum paid for civilian employees in the Quartermaster's Department, including those paid from the funds appropriated for regular supplies, incidental expenses, barracks and quarters, Army transportation, clothing, camp and garrison equipage, shall be limited to the actual requirements of the service, and that no employee paid therefrom shall receive a salary of more than $150 per month, except upon the approval of the Secretary of War, $3,000,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 31, at the end of line 20, insert: "And provided further, That of the sum herein appropriated for "Barracks and quarters" the amount expended for construction of any new building or buildings at any established military post shall not exceed, in the aggregate, the sum of $20,000, and from this appropriation only there shall be paid during the fiscal year 1907 all expenses of plumbing and sewer connections and other like expenses of interior finish or construction of buildings at military posts the construction or repairing of which is chargeable to this appropriation."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I reserve the point of order. I would like to ask the gentleman if this is not the existing law?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does not the present law limit the amount of the appropriation for an Army building to $20,000?

Mr. TAWNEY. It does; but does not limit the number of buildings on which the Department can expend $20,000 in the construction. It is for that very reason that I offer this as a limitation upon this appropriation. Under the statute—section 1136—the Secretary of War has power to construct as many buildings as he may see fit, providing no one of them costs to exceed $20,000. And out of this appropriation, and under the authority of that section of the Revised Statutes, Army posts have been constructed almost complete in form, and it is for the purpose of limiting the expenditure of this appropriation that this amendment is offered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not understand the gentleman's amendment as it was read. Will he explain more fully how it reaches the question?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will read the law as it is to-day governing the authority of the Secretary of War in the expenditure of this appropriation of $3,000,000.

Permanent barracks or quarters and buildings and structures of a permanent nature shall not be constructed unless detailed estimates shall have been previously submitted to Congress and approved by a special appropriation for the same, except when constructed by the troops; and no such structures, the cost of which shall exceed $20,000, shall be erected unless by special authority of Congress.

So that, under this law as construed by the Department and under the appropriation, it is entirely competent for the Secretary of War to erect as many buildings as he may see fit, provided the maximum cost of each does not exceed $20,000. Then the last part of this proviso is for the purpose of requiring all of the expenditure that is made for buildings to be made out of this appropriation, for it is a notorious fact that in the construction of these buildings they are paying for the plumbing out of the appropriation for transportation of the Army. Even the sewers that are constructed in connection with these new buildings are paid for out of the appropriation for transportation of the Army.

The purpose of this amendment, I will say, is, first, to limit the amount that can be expended by the Secretary of War in the construction of buildings to $20,000, and also to provide that the entire cost of these buildings shall be paid out of this particular appropriation and not out of some other appropriation, as has been the practice heretofore. I think the amendment is in the line of good legislation and in the line of good administration, because we do know that in the past the Secretary of War has constructed Army posts without a scintilla of authority except that provided in the section of the Revised Statutes, which I have just read, and which I do not think Congress would approve of or ought to approve of; and for the purpose of bringing the matter to the attention of the House and, if possible, securing a greater limitation upon this appropriation than has heretofore been placed upon it, I have offered this amendment.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss the point of order, except to insist upon it. The amendment changes existing law radically, and I should like to have the Chair rule.

Mr. TAWNEY. I did not know that the point of order was made. I thought it was simply reserved.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did reserve the point of order, but I do not care to press it further.

Mr. HULL. I renew the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. As to the point of order, I will say that it is simply a limitation upon this appropriation.

And provided further, That of the sum herein appropriated for barracks and quarters, the amount expended in construction of any new building or buildings at any established military post, etc., shall not exceed in the aggregate the sum of $20,000.

I submit that under the rule of the House governing limitations it is not a change of existing law, but a limitation.

Mr. HULL. It is more than legislation. It is an absolute change of law. I do not care to argue the point of order further.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear from the gentleman from Iowa as to what law it changes, and in what respect it changes it.

Mr. HULL. By making additional requirements concerning buildings, which requirements are not now in the statute. The plumbing of a building is not considered under the present law as any part of the restriction on the $20,000. It never has been and is not now.

Mr. TAWNEY. Do you mean to say there is any law that authorizes the payment for the plumbing out of the Army transportation appropriation?

Mr. HULL. That question is not involved here.

Mr. TAWNEY. The law does not authorize it.

Mr. HULL. Every man knows that if you let a contract for a house in many cases you let a contract to one man to build your house and to another for the plumbing and to another for the furniture. By the gentleman's own statement he is intending to enlarge the requirements. It limits the number of buildings and changes the law in every respect, and the gentleman from Minnesota stated so in his argument.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will pardon me, I did not state it was a limitation upon the number, except it limits the amount that can be expended for buildings out of this amount.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say one word. The Army has to be moved wherever it is needed. In old times it had to be moved to frontier posts. Nowadays it is conceivable that in some of our outlying posts we might have to put a thousand men. The present law allows them to put up any number of buildings if they do not cost over $20,000 apiece. This would say that hereafter you shall not take a thousand men to any post, because you could not put up the buildings for them, and thus changes the whole law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. If this amendment said that hereafter no money should be expended except in this way, it might be considered a change of existing law; but this amendment, as it seems to the Chair, does not prescribe anything in reference to the number or character of the buildings, but is a limitation as to what buildings the money shall be used for and what other purposes the money shall be used for. It is a limit of the expenditure of the money, and the Chair so holds, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. HULL. I understand the Chair overrules the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. HULL. Then, Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the committee that I hope the amendment will be defeated. The law as it now stands should be repealed in regard to the limitation now existing. It is not conducive to good government and good administration to extend it beyond that now on the statute books. At the time that law was enacted there was no such thing as a large post in the country. At the time the law was enacted $20,000 would build the different buildings needed in a post, with the exception of a very few of the large buildings for administration and for the stables for cavalry and the barracks for men. This is undertaking to cripple the Government in the line of the care for the Army. I hope the gentleman from Minnesota will permit us, so far as we can, to give the Army what it needs under the rules as they now exist, and will not undertake to further cripple it in undertaking to cut down the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs. I do not believe the amendment is good legislation. I do not believe it is offered in any spirit except the general desire that every new chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has to take charge of all the committees and see that they do not go far astray. [Laughter.]

There are Members of this House not on the Committee on Military Affairs who have the welfare of the country at large at heart as much as they would by serving on the other committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is it not a fact that the law prohibits any of these buildings being built at a cost exceeding $20,000?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is it a fact that the War Department has been getting around that law by letting out several contracts for sewerage and for plumbing that goes into the houses?

Mr. HULL. My impression is that under the law the War Department has not violated the law in doing this very thing.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Have they not let out contracts for sewerage and plumbing that goes into the houses?

Mr. HULL. If they have they had a right to do it under the law. The law does limit the cost of buildings, but I have no idea the War Department has violated the law by doing what the gentleman from Alabama suggests.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If my friend will allow me, a building is not complete without it has got chimneys.

Mr. HULL. That is an entirely different proposition. A man may build a house that costs $20,000 and may want very expensive plumbing. Another man may want cheaper plumbing. The plumbing is not the building—another man may not want any plumbing at all, thinks it better not to have it in the house. That is not a part of a building and has never been construed to be a part of it. If I believed it possible to get some consideration of the bill before the House, I would bring in one repealing this provision of the limitation of the cost and take from the Committee on Appropriations the entire administration of the Army, but I have no hopes of getting it through. I do believe that this amendment is intended to cripple the service to the Government, and will result in bad administration in the future rather than a benefit to the Government, and I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman in charge of this bill may scold the new chairman of the Committee on Appropriations as much as he pleases. So far as I am personally concerned it has no effect whatever upon me. It is not for that purpose that he indulges in it or has indulged in that practice since he began the consideration of the bill.

It is for the purpose of trying to slide through here more legislation on this appropriation bill than any chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs or he himself has ever attempted in the past. I suppose he is presuming upon the fact that the Committee on Appropriations has a new chairman, and that no doubt has prompted him to bring in legislation in his appropriation bill that is out of order, as he knows it is, and in violation of the rules of the House of Representatives. This proposition is not offered here for the purpose of crippling the Army nor for the purpose of crippling the Military Committee nor for the purpose of reflecting upon the work of that committee. The gentleman tries to make the House believe that it is offered for that purpose without explaining how it can have that effect. He does this solely for the purpose of appealing to the prejudice of Members that he may secure the defeat of this amendment which is offered in the interests of good government and in the interests of good administration.

Now, I do not want this committee to consider this proposition for one moment because it has been offered by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. If it does not, on its merits, appeal to the judgment of this committee, then, I say, vote it down. Now, let us see what it is. Under existing law the Secretary of War may expend any amount of money at the Army posts that he sees fit in the construction of buildings, provided the cost of the exterior of the structure or structures do not each exceed $20,000. He may build ten new buildings; he may build twenty new buildings at a post, provided their cost, incomplete, does not exceed $200,000 in the aggregate. This is an old statute, adopted when the Army posts, as the gentleman says, were very small. Since that time our Army posts have increased amazingly in size on account of the demands of the Army officers themselves and the troops, which are much greater than they were formerly for comfort and convenience. Hence the Secretary of War presumes, under this section of the statute, to proceed and erect an entirely new post, keeping himself just within the limit of $20,000 as to the actual cost of the frame of each of the buildings. Why, they have even gone so far as to except the plumbing out of this $20,000 and pay for the plumbing in the building out of the Army transportation appropriation. Now, this proposition is to limit the total expenditure to $20,000. If they require more money than that, let them come to Congress, as required by the statute which I read. They have authority to do that. Congress is in session every year, and it is no great hardship for Congress to require the Secretary of War, when he wants to build a new Army post, to come here with his detailed plans and estimates, giving Congress some idea of the amount necessary, and then securing authority for the expenditure of that money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the only way in which this provision affects existing law is this: If they want to expend more than $20,000, then they will have to come to Congress. That is the only difference. Is that a hardship? Is it a hardship for the Military Committee to consider a question of whether or not they should have an appropriation for the purpose of enlarging buildings or spending more than $20,000 at any one Army post? Certainly not. And is it a hardship, or is it wrong, is it against good administration, for Congress now to require them to pay all of the expense of the building out of this appropriation instead of allowing them to go on and take that money out of appropriations set apart for purposes altogether and entirely different from the purpose for which they expend it, as they do when they pay for the plumbing of this building out of the Army transportation appropriation? That is all there is in this amendment, limiting the right or authority of the Secretary to expend not to exceed $20,000 at any one Army post. He can have as many buildings as he sees fit or make such repairs as he sees fit, provided the expenditure does not exceed $20,000; but if his expenditures go beyond that, if the estimates show that he needs more money than that, then he must come to Congress. Now, we must begin very soon to call a halt in this matter of diverting appropriations and spending more money than is actually intended to be expended by Congress. I called attention a few days ago to the way in which the Navy Department is expending public money, taking as much as $750,000 out of an appropriation for maintenance and repair of machinery and reconstructing the interior of battle ships with it—$750,000 expended without any authority of Congress whatever.

We make a large appropriation for care and maintenance of public buildings. Suppose the Secretary of the Treasury should take that lump sum appropriation and set aside $750,000 of it and then gut a Federal building and put in or reconstruct the interior of that building—exactly what the Secretary of the Navy is doing to-day—why the Secretary of the Treasury would be liable to impeachment. We have seen this practice of the War Department. We know that in several instances where new Army posts were constructed and paid for out of this appropriation without any authorization by Congress whatever, and contrary to the spirit, if not the letter, of the statute which I have quoted, and it is in the hope of putting a stop to this practice that I have offered this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I find myself about as near tangled up, and impossible as I ever was in my life. Since I have been a Member of Congress I have never been so mixed up. I have grown up here in a school that taught me about the best thing the average Congressman could do was to follow the lead of one of these great committees of the House, especially the committee having the bill in charge, and I came here to follow, as well as I could, the leadership of the Committee on Military Affairs upon a subject over which I supposed they had jurisdiction. I heard the able decisions of the Chair, in which he commented at some length upon the decisions by some of his predecessors, and affirmed most or all of them, and I do not know which of his predecessors were right and which were wrong, but I am sure the present Chairman is right, and now I find myself up against two leaderships.

I am reminded of a charge given by a judge of the court in Ohio of this character. It was a question between a superintendent and a general manager of one of the industrial corporations, and the court charged the jury that it was a contest between an inferior function and a superior function, and if they found the inferior function collided with the superior function the inferior function must give way and the superior function must control. I went to get that judgment reversed in the Supreme Court and I read the charge, and Judge White, of blessed memory, stopped me in the midst of it and said that hilarity of that kind, appearing to undertake to ridicule a charge of the court below, ought not to be tolerated in the Supreme Court. I told him, however, I was reading the charge of the judge verbatim from the record itself. Now, here the question, in my mind is which is the "superior function." If it is the number of the committee actually engaged, why, the superior function is clearly the Committee on Appropriations, and in rank in the House it is the superior function anyhow. Now, it seems to me that we will have to revise the rules of the House some of these times—about the time I get back here—[applause], and more clearly define the jurisdiction of these two great committees. Ordinarily, I should be inclined to take the opinion of the Committee on Military Affairs on these questions and the Committee on Appropriations on other questions pertinent to their report, and I should not be governed in the slightest degree by the question of how long the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations had been chairman of that committee. I propose to stand with the gentleman on his merits, and up to this time his merits are very high, in my estimation, and yet I do not see any particular occasion for the collision that is going on here, and I am lost. There is where I am. If I can get a chance to vote on both sides of this question I am going to do it in the interest of the consistency which I have always maintained. "I can be happy with either were t'other dear charmer away." [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, when we reach another provision in this bill I want to call attention to a number of expenditures which have been made out of the appropriation for the transportation of the Army and its supplies which are entirely unjustifiable. In connection with this amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], however, I wish to call attention to this fact, that not only has the Department of War paid for plumbing of buildings out of the appropriation for transportation, but it has paid for the heating and lighting apparatus in those buildings out of the appropriation for supplies for the Army. In the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs this year it appears that for heating apparatus, for electric wiring, bakeries, etc., whatever that may mean, $283,746 has been used so far out of the appropriation for supplies, and $285,732 for plumbing out of the appropriation for transportation, so that in addition to the $3,400,000 appropriated by the Army bill this year for the construction of barracks the War Department has so far taken over $500,000 from other appropriations for the same purpose. If Congress intends that buildings should be limited to a specific cost, we should see that the Department can not utilize some other fund improperly and illegally in order to increase the cost of those buildings. The Quartermaster-General stated to the Committee on Military Affairs that where hospitals were built the medical and surgical corps insists that the limit of $20,000 applies to the structure alone, and against his protest they have put in the heating plant, the plumbing plant, and the lighting plant of those buildings out of other appropriations, so that nobody knows to-day the cost of any building erected under this provision for barracks and quarters for which we have been appropriating over $3,000,000 for many years.

Now, this amendment offered by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will compel the Department of War to complete any building built under the law authorizing the expenditure of this money for $20,000. Let me call the attention of the committee to what has been done. The War Department submits a system of allotments made for buildings at the different barracks or posts since these appropriations were commenced. It shows they have allotted $18,000 for a cavalry stable that comes out of this appropriation. How much is allotted to heating, how much is allotted to putting in plumbing, how much it costs to sewer the buildings, it is utterly impossible to tell, because all of that work is done out of appropriations aggregating some $17,000,000. And in the interest of good administration and good legislation the Department should be compelled to use the one appropriation to complete the buildings that are authorized under this provision of the bill. There are a number of items that I will call attention to later, but this is one of the most flagrant instances that has been unearthed in which the Department has been using several funds to accomplish purposes never in contemplation by Congress when the appropriations were made. If any reform is to be effected, a stop must be put to the practice right here on this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, it is a very serious charge that is brought against the Secretary of War, and a Department which is very largely made up of Army officers, whose honor has never before, so far as I know, been so impeached.

Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the rashness with which he says that the introduction of plumbing into buildings is wrongfully charged to the transportation of the Army and its supplies. He has not read the bill. If he will look on page 33, in lines 16, 17, 18, and 19, he will find, under "Transportation of the Army and its supplies," the following language:

For procuring water, and introducing the same to buildings at such posts as from their situation require it to be brought from a distance, and for the disposal of sewerage and drainage.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these matters are historical. They are governed rightly by precedent. When our posts were first established, plumbing was almost unknown. At that time some of the posts had bad well water, and they had to bring it in by pipes into the posts. This was transportation of a most necessary supply and so allowed in the Army bill. As time changed, water was introduced into the buildings and plumbing placed through them. Provision therefor was made in the Army bill. It was done according to the old precedent, charged in the old way, and known by every Congress for the last fifty years to have been charged in that way, ever since plumbing came into use, under that item of appropriation of transportation, including water supply, plumbing, and drainage. And when Congress passed the law that expenditures under another item for buildings, viz, "barracks and quarters," should not exceed $20,000 for each building, Congress knew what they were talking about, and the War Department knew what they were talking about. They were talking about a practice that was settled, namely, that the cost of a building meant the cost of the building, and that the plumbing and drainage was introduced and charged under another appropriation.

That was their belief and the honest belief of the Department. I believe it to be the law, but whether it be the law or not, even if gentlemen can make technical objections on the letter of the law, the honesty and straightforwardness of the Quartermaster's Department under the Secretary of War is manifest and appeals to this whole House, and ought not to be impugned by this attack of this Appropriation Committee and its leaders upon the War Department, because, as they say, they have found something wrong in the Department of the Navy.

Now, as to the merits of the gentleman's proposed amendment. We all know that for the sake of economy troops throughout the United States are being drawn from the smaller camps into regimental camps. We all know also that on occasions there is an outbreak, we will say, of ladronism in the Philippine Islands, and then come changes of post on the question of health, and from time to time camps have to be established of rather a large number of men as necessity requires. Now, when those camps are established, when these men—thousands of them—are drawn into a post, economical buildings are put up for them. We know that in a large post there have to be new hospitals erected, if there is an epidemic. Besides, we have to establish gymnasiums and reading rooms and little conveniences of one sort or another. Some posts have had improvements already amounting to $500,000—certainly at Leavenworth—and to say that only $20,000 worth of buildings may be added at such a post for all necessities that might arise during a year is putting a restriction upon the Secretary of War that has never been put on him in the past and that ought not to be put upon him now.

If you intend to change the Army into a fixed machine, to treat it as you do a Department situated here in Washington, and to say it must stay in one place, well and good. But if you are going to have an Army which, under the management of a live commander in chief is going to be gathered and moved where it will do the most good and where the officers and soldiers will get the most benefit, in such bodies as are necessary, you must give leave to the Secretary of War and the President to put up such buildings as will be necessary at the time without waiting for two or three years to get a Committee of Appropriations, who seem from what they assert here to care nothing about the Army, to say yea or to say nay to it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I think the question that is before the House is an important one so far as good legislation is concerned. I do not think there is any greater opportunity in this House for a waste of public money than to have two appropriation committees having jurisdiction over the same subject-matter, because when that happens, if the Departments can not get the appropriations they want from one committee, they appeal to the other, and the consequence is that there is often a duplication of appropriations.

Now, the history of this proposition grows out of the fact that when the Committee on Military Affairs was authorized by the House to report the Army appropriation bill, it was given the power to make appropriations for repairs.

The power of making appropriations for Army improvements and Army buildings was still left in the general Appropriations Committee. This brought about a conflict. Both committees were appropriating for buildings. The Military Committee appropriated for buildings under the ground of repairs, and the general Appropriations Committee appropriated for buildings on the ground of improvement. To obviate that, to prevent confusion, to keep the two committees from having jurisdiction over the same subject-matter, Congress passed this law providing that the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs should only extend to buildings that cost not exceeding $20,000, and of all buildings over and above that amount the general Appropriations Committee should have jurisdiction. Now, I think it is manifest, Mr. Chairman, that the Congress intended there to distinctly draw the line of demarkation between the jurisdiction of the two committees of the House, and if any subterfuge is resorted to in order to increase the cost of any building in any way above $20,000 it is done by way of encroaching upon the jurisdiction of the general Appropriations Committee. I therefore think it is of the utmost importance that this line should be distinctly drawn, and that we keep definite this jurisdiction of these subject-matters.

Mr. KEIFER. If the gentleman from Alabama will permit me, I want to inquire if we passed a law defining the jurisdiction of these two committees?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEIFER. Is there a statute of that kind?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; it has been read from the desk this morning.

Mr. KEIFER. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but he ought to know. I do not believe there is any such statute.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that the gentleman from Minnesota has within the last hour—since the gentleman from Ohio has been in the House—has had it read.

Mr. KEIFER. You mean a statute on the jurisdiction of the two committees?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In this particular matter.

Mr. KEIFER. They say about me around here it is a rule.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, the gentleman may state that it does not fix the jurisdiction; the statute provides that the appropriations allowed on this military appropriation bill shall not exceed $20,000. I say that fixes the jurisdiction. I do not say that the statute says so in so many words.

Mr. KEIFER. Well, then, Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman withdraws his statement——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not withdraw my statement.

Mr. KEIFER. That the statute fixes the jurisdiction of these two committees. My understanding is that no statute ever undertook to regulate the jurisdiction of a committee of the Senate or of the House of Representatives.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman from Ohio did not understand what I said. I did not intend anyone to understand that we have done that by statute, and jurisdiction was fixed in so many words, but what I said was the statute says that the buildings that they build shall be limited to $20,000, and that fixes the jurisdiction, that the statute has the effect of fixing the jurisdiction of these two committees. Now, Mr. Chairman, I say it is of the utmost importance that this House shall maintain that line and hold one committee within its jurisdiction and the other committee within its.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, just a word; and first in reply to the gentleman from Alabama. He must be awfully mistaken about the statute fixing any jurisdiction here, because the statute about limiting the amount to $20,000 for any one building was passed when both appropriation bills were in the hands of the Appropriations Committee, and it is simply a provision that where the buildings cost over $20,000 detailed estimates must be submitted to Congress, and where the building is to cost $20,000 or less it is not necessary to submit estimates.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That fixes the jurisdiction of your committee.

Mr. HULL. Not by statute. Under the rules that formerly prevailed, when the Committee on Appropriations had all these bills they put buildings of a cost of $20,000 in the Army bill and for more than $20,000 in the fortification bill, and this same old question has come up on this bill for the last eleven years. The whim of the Committee on Appropriations when they had all appropriations seems to have fixed it, not the law.

Now, so far as the argument of the gentleman from New York is concerned, that a part of the appropriation for transportation for the Army and its supplies, a certain amount is used for the purpose of sewering and for the purpose of constructing roads and plumbing on these buildings, that applies as much to the bills reported from the Committee on Appropriations as it does on those from the Committee on Military Affairs. It is used in both cases. That has nothing to do with this question before the House now. If it is the wish to limit more strictly the Department upon the expenditure of the money, it will come up when that clause of the bill is reached; not now. The question now is, Shall the Committee on Appropriations put a limitation upon this bill that virtually changes the law to-day and makes an additional requirement in order to get an appropriation from the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs and transfer it to the Committee on Appropriations? That is the question before the House.

As to the other proposition, that the gentleman from Minnesota says it is because he is new, I will appeal to this House that is hardly correct, but I will say this: That there is a long line of illustrious men who have been chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. One of the greatest parliamentarians, one of the greatest legitimate economists that has ever served in this House—what I mean by economy is proper economy—the present Speaker of this House so served; and during all the years he was chairman of that committee he never attempted to invade the functions of the Army Committee to put such a limitation upon this appropriation in the Army bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will ask the gentleman if the present Speaker of this House when he was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations did not object to this very appropriation and try to amend it?

Mr. HULL. He never did, to my knowledge, since I have been chairman. He never has offered such a proposition as this.

Now, when it comes to the proposition concerning the transportation of the Army it is a legitimate argument that the gentleman from New York makes, and if he can establish his contention new language should be put in there, and it should be made more difficult to spend the money on the lines suggested, but not on this amendment, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] has splendidly answered the argument made on that subject. He has shown that from the very beginning of appropriations for the Army these same lines of procedure have been followed and have never been criticised until to-day. I am perfectly willing to meet that question when it comes up, and I am willing to throw any safeguard that may be needed around the appropriation, but I do protest against this amendment, which seeks still further to curb the Committee on Military Affairs. [Applause.]

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I have had some little experience in dealing with these matters, and it seems to me there has been a little too much heat and not quite enough light upon this proposition.

Mr. KEIFER. Good!

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I think the criticisms of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] were unfair and unfounded. The exact cost of every building erected by the Quartermaster's Department during the last fiscal year can be determined by the official reports of that department and by the records of this House. If gentlemen will turn to the hearings of the Committee on Military Affairs, which I presume can be obtained by sending to the committee room, they will find a detailed statement of the cost of every building erected last year, and they will find, further, that the law has been complied with in every particular, and that there have been no such illegalities or division of funds as has been so loudly charged. On pages 48 to 55 they will find these facts.

This report from the Quartermaster-General has apparently divided the disbursements for buildings into five different divisions: First, amount taken from the appropriation for military posts, carried in the sundry civil bill; second, the amount taken for the appropriation for barracks and quarters, carried in the military appropriation bill; third, the amount for plumbing, taken from the transportation item of this bill in accordance with law, as shown by the gentleman from New Jersey; fourth, the amount paid for heating, and fifth, amount paid for wiring, both taken from the item of regular supplies, on page 25 of this bill, where there is found the following language authorizing such expenditure:

> Regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department, including care and protection, consisting of stoves and apparatus required for heating of department headquarters,

And so forth.

So that in every particular the Quartermaster's Department has complied strictly with the law, and it is the only way under the law such expenditures could be made, as the language is explicit for these purposes. They have carried their accounts so that they can ascertain the exact cost of each one of these buildings and of every single item chargeable to each one of these separate funds, and that is what these gentlemen have been so loudly demanding. Now, more than that, they have complied with the law exactly as it stands on the statute book, by using the funds from the items which Congress provided exactly for such purposes, and have made a complete and faithful report and account of their expenditures for the information of your committees and the Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Do I understand that this report shows that the entire cost of these buildings, including plumbing, heating, and lighting, does not exceed in any instance $20,000?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Why, certainly; it shows exactly what each building does cost, and that is just exactly what I was coming to. I agree with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that the present condition of affairs of division of authority in appropriating and providing for buildings for the military establishment is unfortunate for the public service, for the Army, and for good legislation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the gentleman gets away from that point, I understand the gentleman to make the statement that the law has been precisely complied with.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I do make that statement, yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, if we really have a law that enables the Department to charge plumbing up to an appropriation provided for the transportation of troops, it is a curiosity of political literature, and the House ought to be acquainted with it so that it may amend, cancel, or otherwise change it.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I am very glad to give my views upon that, Mr. Chairman, and the exact information which seems to be needed to a fair and clear understanding of it. It is unfortunate that these misunderstandings exist, and I think that the Committee on Military Affairs should segregate the great variety of items which are now carried under the head of transportation. The general heading of transportation carries nearly forty different kinds and varieties of items which are not strictly transportation of the Army at all, using the word by its ordinary meaning, but which are all specifically mentioned and provided for in this appropriation bill under that general heading, and which items are just as legal, just as much a part of this item and bill, and just as much required in the public service as transportation. It so happens that the headline of this general paragraph embracing all these subjects is "Transportation of the Army and its supplies." Yet for convenience it is commonly designated and spoken of as the item of transportation of the Army. As a matter of fact, it embraces probably forty or fifty different kinds of items, among them the following:

For procuring water and introducing the same to buildings at such posts as from their situation require it to be brought from a distance, and for the disposal of sewage and drainage.

That is one of the mass of the items embraced under the general heading "Transportation of the Army and its supplies."

Now, I agree with the gentleman, I think that is bad legislation, and should be more specific and definite, but it is the law. I think these separate items ought to be segregated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is worse than bad legislation; it is absurd, isn't it?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. It is; but that is the law and that has been the law for a great many years. I think there ought to be a segregation of most of these items. There has been no segregation, and Congress is responsible for the nonaction, and under these circumstances the Quartermaster's Department only perform their duty when they take the expense for procuring water out of this item; they simply comply with the law just as we have made it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understood the gentleman to say that the statement I made was entirely misleading and unfounded.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I did say so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to what the Quartermaster-General of the Army said.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Minnesota be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to read what the Quartermaster-General said:

In reference to the construction and repair of hospitals I would bring to your attention the fact that $20,000 is not a sufficient amount to build a modern hospital. And, further, I do not think that money should be taken from the appropriations for Army transportation and regular supplies for the purpose of paying for the plumbing, heating, and lighting system of hospitals where Congress has appropriated a specific amount for the construction of these buildings. Where given an appropriation of $20,000 or more for construction of a hospital, the Medical Corps take the ground that the amount is simply for the construction of a building, and that the appropriations above named should be drawn upon for the plumbing, heating, and lighting systems, which, in the end, cause the structure to cost considerably over the amount specified by Congress for the specific work. I am of the opinion that when Congress appropriates a specific sum for construction it means that that amount will complete the building in all respects, and in modern construction these systems are wholly part of the building.

That is the statement of the Quartermaster-General; and he protests against the practice of using these other appropriations, and states that the Comptroller of the Treasury partly decided against him. As my statements are based upon those I have read, I think the gentleman is hardly justified in saying that they are unfounded.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. In reply I have this to say, Mr. Chairman: There always has been a controversy between the Surgeon-General's Office and the Quartermaster-General's Office over many of the items needed for the construction of hospitals. There is a separate item for the construction and repair of hospitals on page 36 of the bill, and the Quartermaster-General's Department desires the Surgeon-General's Department to pay the whole expense of constructing the hospital, and not take the plumbing and the sewerage from the item of transportation and the heating and wiring from the item of regular supplies. That is a controversy between these two divisions in the War Department which has been going on for a great many years. The Quartermaster-General makes his estimates for his own work and his own purposes, as he knows best what is needed. Then we cut him down some, and then he sees another slice taken for purposes of another division, for its benefit, but charged to his accounts. This may make a deficiency for which he is held responsible under severe penalties, or else some public service is left undone by his Department for which he had planned and secured the means. It is an embarrassing situation for him.

But the decisions have been against him, and the Quartermaster-General has, however, complied with the law in taking the plumbing out of the transportation item and finishing hospitals just the same as it does the barracks and quarters.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word more as to how this matter works out. The old law providing for a limit of $20,000 was passed a great many years ago, some time in the late fifties. There has been an entire change in the construction of buildings since that law was enacted. It is now almost impossible to get any kind of a building costing less than $20,000 adapted for the purposes of quarters for the higher officers or barracks for the men. For that sum it is almost impossible to build a building to be used as a family dwelling substantial enough, or warm enough, or convenient enough, at many of the posts. If you will take the report submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs by the Quartermaster-General's Department, on pages 48 to 53, you will find as I have remarked, that last year about sixteen different buildings in which the contract for the structure was slightly less than $20,000, yet the amount charged and necessarily added, as required by law, for plumbing, heating, and wiring would make each one of these buildings cost slightly over $20,000.

Now, the only effect of this amendment suggested by my colleague from Minnesota would be to transfer the jurisdiction of the construction of these buildings from the Committee on Military Affairs to the Committee on Appropriations. It would make no difference in the character or cost of the buildings or the service to be performed, but would transfer the jurisdiction. That would be the sole effect of the bill unless you change the law as to the various items in regular supplies and change the law as to the various items embraced in the general item of transportation. You do not change the law in any particular about segregating these items. All you do would be to cast a somewhat heavier burden on the item of "Barracks and quarters" and lighten correspondingly "Transportation and regular supplies," and would not at all affect hospitals, about which my good friend from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] feels so badly. The only effect of this amendment, then, would be to transfer the jurisdiction of constructing these sixteen or so buildings from one committee to another.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it not true under existing law that the Secretary of War is authorized to construct as many $20,000 buildings at an Army post as he may choose?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Within the amount provided by law.

Mr. TAWNEY. Twenty thousand dollars for each building?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. To be taken out of the barracks and quarters fund.

Mr. TAWNEY. Three million dollars is available for the construction of new buildings under that provision, limiting the cost of each building to $20,000, regardless of the number.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. The gentleman does not quite grasp the situation.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask the gentleman if that is not the authority that the Secretary of War has in respect to the construction of new buildings at Army posts?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes; but you have got to give the authority to the Secretary of War to construct new buildings within the limits provided by Congress, and he ought to have that authority; and as I have just shown, as a matter of fact, out of this fund he did only construct sixteen buildings last year, costing in the aggregate less than $300,000; so only a small part of this item is used for that class of construction.

Mr. TAWNEY. Let me ask the gentleman another question. Would it not be just as logical for Congress to appropriate three or five million dollars to be used by the Secretary of the Treasury in constructing Federal buildings anywhere that, in his judgment, the public service demanded it?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the House has thrashed that out before. This committee and the House has to choose between these two entirely different methods of conducting public business. Whenever we attempt to segregate and specifically apply the items for the construction of buildings at different posts and as we may indicate, it has always degenerated into favoritism, and the Members of the House or the Senate particularly who have the ears of the members of the Committees on Military Affairs or of the Committees on Appropriations always get the preference and have their buildings inserted in the bill. Sometimes this has been all right, but I believe the experience on this floor is more often that it is wrong, that the public service suffers, that expenditures vastly increase without adequate benefit to the Army for them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has again expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the time of his colleague be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I will state that I shall move to close debate when the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] is through.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the result is that a large number of buildings are erected which ought not to be erected. There are fifty-five military posts in this country now being actively operated by the War Department. Thirty would do the work better, and it would be better for the Army and country if the Army were so centralized. The rest are political posts. Of the buildings which would be erected by specific appropriations a large part would be political buildings if we attempted to exercise the power of Congress by designating the particular structures upon which the money should be expended.

I admit, as a general proposition, it is not good legislation to place this large power in the hands of any executive officer. As a general proposition, my colleague is right, but in this particular case when we look over the country and see so many military posts that ought not to exist, when we note the buildings constructed that ought not to be constructed, under direction of this very Congress, it is evident that the result seems to be that in the long run we get better legislation and we have better administration and more economy in the construction of buildings by giving a lump sum to the Secretary of War and compelling him to allot these items and report specifically to Congress, and be held responsible for the rightful expenditure of that money. We have had several contests upon the floor of this House at various times over this kind of legislation, and, to my recollection, in every instance where we have attempted to specify these items and compel expenditure on any one post it has resulted in detriment to the public service; and much as I dislike to see a lump sum go into the hands of any departmental officer, this is one of the cases where I think it is necessary.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman answer a question for information?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Who occupies these buildings at the posts for which this $3,000,000 is appropriated?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Officers and men of the Army.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman mean the enlisted men?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. How large are the buildings that are built for the accommodation of the enlisted men?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. There are two company barracks usually.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then the buildings that are constructed for the housing of the officers, the gentleman says, can not be constructed for less than $20,000 apiece?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Some can be and some can not be, depending entirely on the location, material, and kind of buildings required for grade of officers to occupy them.

Mr. TAWNEY. How many Members of this House does the gentleman suppose are occupying buildings that cost to exceed $20,000, exclusive of grounds?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Some of those buildings will house from two to four families, depending on the location and the character of building. Some of them, I think, are obliged in some places to care for four families. The buildings are good ones, are a credit to the Government and to the constructing officers, and will last for many years and justify our expenditure as entirely wise. We can't expect self-respecting officers who will take a pride in the military service unless we properly care for them and their families at our posts. If we degrade these officers and their families, we show our own lack of realization of the true needs of the service.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman to contend that the discretion of the Secretary of War would be more wisely exercised than the discretion of Congress?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. In this particular case.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what I mean. I have just been informed, and I would ask the gentleman whether he knows it to be correct information or not, that there has been expended $12,500 for the erection of a band stand out at Fort Riley? Does the gentleman know anything about that?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I know nothing about it. I am not on the Military Committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is on page 56 of the hearings, I am informed, that the evidence was adduced.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I have no doubt it is true if it is in the book of hearings. I do not know anything about it, but it may be that it is an abuse. At the same time, Mr. Chairman, we should consider this—that Fort Riley is the largest military post in the United States, with the possible exception of Leavenworth; that a large number of troops are there; that it is one of the show places of the Army of the United States; that music is one of the necessities of military life, because, in order to have the right kind of discipline, in order to keep troops and officers and their families in the right sort of spirits and condition, we all know there should be music, and, if necessary, a band stand, and I am prepared to defend just that kind of an expenditure as a general proposition.

As to this case, I do not know anything about it. I am willing to concede that for years many of us who have been acquainted with military affairs have thought and stated that the military authorities were expending altogether too much money at Fort Riley. It has seemed to have been a favorite, and large amounts have been expended. It may have been needed; I do not know as to it. It has seemed at times as an act of undue favoritism, but yet we must defer to the judgment of some one, and conceding that there has been favoritism and extravagance here, yet on the whole our money has been very wisely, safely, and economically and honestly expended.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not a $12,500 band stand, because my family could live in that, and I have very numerous children.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. The gentleman from Rhode Island informs me that is a headquarters for the band. That may be true, and if so, the expenditure would be wise and timely. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to weary the House and I just desire to make this observation: The committee which knows the most about these matters I take to be the Committee on Military Affairs. I believe they are in closer touch with the necessities of the military service.

Now, there have been in the past some unwise economies as to many public buildings and as to many public expenditures caused by officials not knowing closely the real needs and trying to closely economize without adequate information. I believe that the wisest way in which these expenditures can be made must be under authority of the Secretary of War himself and that the best thing which can be done is to keep the jurisdiction as to such matters in this House, just as it is now, until such time as the House can compel a segregation of these items—a rearrangement of all matters connected with construction in the War Department—which ought to be done in the near future.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves that all debate upon the pending paragraph be closed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, before that motion is put, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question or two.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman from Minnesota, I understand, desires to speak. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. TAWNEY. Only two minutes.

Mr. HULL. I move that all debate be closed after the gentleman from Minnesota concludes. However, I do not want to cut the gentleman from Missouri off from his question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to ask this question the gentleman from Mississippi asked the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS], and that is, Is it true that they have spent $12,500 for a band stand at Fort Riley?

Mr. HULL. Not for a band stand solely, but for accommodations they probably did.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How many members are there in the band?

Mr. HULL. Well, there are a good many bands there. They have more than a brigade. They have several bands. Every regiment has a band that is there, and they have artillery, infantry, and cavalry all there. I hope I can get further information on the subject.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How many troops are stationed at Fort Riley?

Mr. HULL. I should say three or four thousand, although I may be mistaken in that; but if the companies are full there would be that many.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. There is not one Member of Congress out of twenty who lives in a house that has cost half of that.

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman allow me? I was out at Fort Riley a week last fall and I did not see any band stand. I think there were 1,200 cavalry at work there, and nearly as much artillery, working in the same way over these hills and going through this indirect fire which I explained the other day.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Probably you were so busy inspecting the cavalry you did not have time to inspect the band stand?

Mr. PARKER. I inspected everything as far as I could. A great deal of the work was cavalry work and out of doors, and there were very few buildings to make any show at all. If you want to see show buildings you would have to go somewhere else.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I made that statement and I want the House to understand where I got it, and if the gentleman from Iowa is right then this pamphlet is not right. On page 55 there is a heading of "Barracks and quarters." It begins with Alaska, and goes on——

Mr. TAWNEY. From what is the gentleman reading?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am reading from hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs on the Army appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1906–7, and on page 56 is an item under the head of "Fort Riley," "band stand, $12,335." Not a word about accommodations for the band. There is no "etc." with which they generally cover up something in these items that are submitted to the committees by the Departments. The next item is "hay sheds," which, of course, are not accommodations for the band, and then there is something else about "converting storehouse into offices." Now, this is submitted as a statement of "allotments made for important construction since general project was approved," the general project of barracks. Now, if they have a way of stating band stand when they mean accommodations for the members of the band, then it is time they should be made to specify more particularly. This is a construction almost as bad as that recent Republican ruling that frog legs were dressed poultry.

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman in answer, in one word, that all this detailed information was put in at the request of the committee after we had gotten through our hearings and was prepared after the hearing. It was simply printed for the information of the House and the committee. The item the gentleman refers to would not be affected by this amendment under any conditions. It is therefore not before the House at this time, but will be later. I am glad if the detailed statement will bring about better administration.

I move that after three minutes all debate on this amendment and the paragraph be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] moves that all debate on the pending paragraph and the amendment thereto be closed after three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move to amend by making it five minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Three minutes will be sufficient.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the members of the committee that in offering this amendment I have not been prompted by any desire or did not even know that, in the event of the adoption of the amendment, the Committee on Appropriations would have jurisdiction of the appropriations for buildings at Army posts. My motive was solely and alone for the purpose of bringing to the attention of the committee the practice that obtains to-day in the administration of this appropriation of $3,000,000, and then to submit to the committee the amendment which would have the effect of putting a stop to that practice, giving Congress supervisory control to the extent of knowing what the money was to be expended for before it was spent and limiting the cost in each particular instance.

My colleague says that to do that would lead to bad administration and worse legislation. But he himself admits now that we have twenty more military posts in the United States than we ought to have. How did we get them? We got them under the present practice of the Department which this amendment seeks to correct. We obtained them without authority of law, except in so far as this statute authorizes the Secretary of War to construct as many buildings as he pleases, provided the cost of those buildings does not exceed $20,000 apiece.

Another thing, Mr. Chairman, which I think every member of this committee who has spoken for or against this amendment admits, it is bad practice to appropriate in one part of an appropriation bill for the frame of a building and then under the guise of transportation for the Army appropriate for another necessary part of that building, namely, the plumbing, the heating, and lighting. It is to put a stop to this practice that the amendment says, after limiting the cost of expenditure to $20,000:

> And from this appropriation only there shall be paid during the fiscal year 1907 all expenses of plumbing and sewer connections and other like expenses of interior finish or construction of buildings at military posts, the construction or repairing of which is chargeable to this appropriation.

Now, if this is adopted it limits the expenditure for the building to $20,000 and provides that plumbing and interior finish of those buildings must be paid out of this appropriation instead of being paid out of some other appropriation under the title of "Transportation for the Army," or any other title.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TAWNEY) there were—ayes 37, noes 56.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Transportation of the Army and its supplies: Transportation of the Army, including baggage of the troops when moving either by land or water, and including also the transportation of recruits and recruiting parties heretofore paid from the appropriation for "Expenses of recruiting" and the transportation of applicants for enlistment between recruiting stations and recruiting depots; of supplies to the militia furnished by the War Department; of the necessary agents and employees; of clothing, camp and garrison equipage, and other quartermaster's stores, from Army depots or places of purchase or delivery to the several posts and Army depots, and from those depots to the troops in the field; of horse equipments and subsistence stores from the places of purchase, and from the places of delivery under contract to such places as the circumstances of the service may require them to be sent; of ordnance, ordnance stores, and small arms from the foundries and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and Army depots; freights, wharfage, tolls, and ferriages; the purchase and hire of draft and pack animals and harness, and the purchase and repair of wagons, carts, and drays, and of ships and other vessels and boats required for the transportation of troops and supplies and for garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several posts; hire of teamsters and other employees; extra-duty pay of enlisted men driving teams, repairing means of transportation, and employed as train masters, and in opening roads and building wharves; transportation of funds of the Army; the expenses of sailing public transports on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific oceans; and hereafter no steamship in the transport service of the United States shall be sold or disposed of without the consent of Congress having been first had or obtained; for procuring water, and introducing the same to buildings at such posts as from their situation require it to be brought from a distance, and for the disposal of sewage and drainage, and for constructing roads and wharves; for the payment of Army transportation lawfully due such land-grant railroads as have not received aid in Government bonds (to be adjusted in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court in cases decided under such land-grant acts), but in no case shall more than 50 per cent of full amount of service be paid: Provided, That such compensation shall be computed upon the basis of the tariff or lower special rates for like transportation performed for the public at large, and shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service: Provided further, That in expending the money appropriated by this act, a railroad company which has not received aid in bonds of the United States, and which obtained a grant of public land to aid in the construction of its railroad on condition that such railroad should be a post route and military road, subject to the use of the United States for postal, military, naval, and other Government services, and also subject to such regulations as Congress may impose restricting the charge for such Government transportation, having claims against the United States for transportation of troops and munitions of war and military supplies and property over such aided railroads, shall be paid out of the moneys appropriated by the foregoing provision only on the basis of such rate for the transportation of such troops and munitions of war and military supplies and property as the Secretary of War shall deem just and reasonable under the foregoing provision, such rate not to exceed 50 per cent of the compensation for such Government transportation as shall at that time be charged to and paid by private parties to any such company for like and similar transportation; and the amount so fixed to be paid shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service: Provided further, That the number of draft animals purchased from this appropriation, added to those now on hand, shall be limited to such numbers as are actually required for the service, $11,750,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be applied to the payment of the expense of using transports in any other Government work than the transportation of the Army and its supplies.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs if it is a fact that out of this appropriation for transportation of the Army the War Department has purchased boats for torpedo planters?

Mr. HULL. I am inclined to think that that is true. I see from the report of the Quartermaster-General it was for the transportation of the supplies of the Army in the target practice of the artillery on the Pacific coast.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Will the gentleman inform us if there is any ground upon which it can be pretended that torpedo planters is covered by any of the subdivisions for transportation?

Mr. HULL. The fact of its coming into any particular division I should say it would have to be put on the ground of line 5. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. PARKER. Let me read this section; that is all I desire to do:

All ships and other vessels and boats required for the transportation of troops and supplies and for garrison purposes.

The Quartermaster says and the Chief of Artillery says that they had to have artillery drill in torpedoes in these harbors, and that these boats are used specially in order to take around these torpedoes and not purely for military purposes. They are military boats.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Does the gentleman from Iowa claim that the torpedo planter is a boat solely for the transportation of the torpedo?

Mr. HULL. I should say, in a case of this character, it would have been much better to have come to Congress to get authority. I prefer they would not use this fund to that extent, and I will say, in view of all this debate and discussion to-day, to avoid any possible future criticism, I am in favor of the Committee on Military Affairs passing a resolution requiring these matters shall be segregated so far as possible, and that anything not absolutely authorized by law and by the usages of the past forty years shall be specifically mentioned.

Mr. KAHN. The testimony before the committee shows that these boats were not only used for the purposes of planting torpedoes, but they go from one port to another.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. For the purpose of carrying supplies?

Mr. KAHN. Not for the purpose of transportation, but for the purpose of operating and planting torpedoes.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. They served other purposes, and they could not be put under the provision to plant torpedoes.

Mr. HULL. My judgment is, Mr. Chairman, that wherever it is necessary to purchase a boat Congress ought to pass upon it, because it is a new departure.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The language of this provision is exceedingly comprehensive. As indicated in the heading, it is intended to provide for all expenditures for the "Transportation of the Army and its supplies." Under its terms authority is given to do many things incidental to that work, and provision is made for some objects but remotely related to Army transportation.

Comprehensive as is the language of this provision, however, it does not even suggest, much less authorize, many uses to which similar appropriations have been put.

Inquiries made during the present session have developed the existence of practices in almost every Department of the Government that are indefensible. Such practices have continued for many years, and time and much effort are required to eradicate them completely. Appropriations made for specific purposes by the Congress have been used for purposes never authorized, nor even in contemplation. Not only has this been a very prevailing practice, but at times pressure has been exerted upon auditing officials to pass accounts showing expenditures in unauthorized ways.

I have collected a number of items for which moneys appropriated for the "Transportation of the Army and its supplies" have been used, for which it is doubtful whether authority can be spelled out of the very broad language of this provision. They are submitted to the committee, not in criticism of the Committee on Military Affairs, but for the purpose of having the attention of Congress called to them, in the hope that the evils may in time be eliminated.

Out of such appropriations there has been expended about $170,000 for preparing the grounds of the War College and building a sea wall for their protection. Specific appropriations had been made for the War College; $800,000, it has been said. Liberal appropriations, in the opinion of many men. A limit had been placed upon the cost of the building, and yet a sea wall was built and the grounds were laid out and graded and walks and drives were built out of the appropriation for "Transportation of the Army." This is not an isolated case. The testimony is to the effect that all work for the improvement of grounds at Army posts is paid for out of this appropriation.

Mr. HULL. Of course the gentleman from New York understands that the War College is on the grounds of the Engineers' School, and that a large part of the flats has been reclaimed by building that wall, and that the appropriation he refers to is not for the War College, but for the Engineers' School, and the whole reservation of Washington Barracks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the testimony before the Committee on Appropriations was to the effect that $170,000 was taken from the fund for transportation of the Army, in order to lay out walks and drives and fix up the grounds, and to build that sea wall. There was no specific authority ever granted for that purpose, and I think the gentleman will agree with that statement.

Mr. HULL. The money was not expended for the War College, but for the whole reservation. Additional acres have been gathered in so as to very largely increase the area of land, and as a matter of economy the expenditure has resulted in the reclaiming of a lot of land which to-day would sell for twice as much as has been expended.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Whatever may have been the purpose or whatever may have been the result, the use of this appropriation for that purpose was utterly indefensible.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman, of course, is well aware of the fact that under the heading "Transportation of the Army and its supplies" there is included a specific item for opening roads and building wharves.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But not building sea walls and laying out grounds as gardens and drives for the accommodation of the seven or eight officers who are studying at the War College; and the gentleman from Iowa has never attempted, and I do not believe he is attempting now to justify it. This was an expenditure made by the Department under a forced and strained construction of the language in this provision.

Of the same or even a more offensive character is the practice that exists regarding the construction of hospitals for the Army, about which so much has just been said. At different times hospitals have been authorized to cost a specific sum. One bureau of the War Department has insisted that the limitation applied to the building, exclusive of the plumbing and of the heating and lighting plants. The result has been that the plumbing and the heating and lighting plants in such buildings have been installed and the money for such work taken from the appropriations for the "Transportation of the Army and its supplies," and for "Regular supplies."

Within the last few days the House learned of the manner in which certain coal lands in the island of Batan, in the Philippine Islands, were investigated and an option for their purchase obtained out of the same funds at a cost of about $37,000. Early in this session an estimate for a deficiency appropriation of $50,000 was submitted for the "Transportation of the Army and its supplies," and upon investigation it was disclosed that the money was to be used to purchase the mining claims of two Spaniards. The entire transaction was based upon the theory that as coal was used in the operation of Army transports such expenditures were properly chargeable to appropriations for transportation.

Some of the purposes for which expenditures have been made from these appropriations are unquestionably laudable. If appropriations were asked for the specific purposes they would undoubtedly be made, but no torture of the language used in this provision can justify the expenditures that have been made from these appropriations.

A year or two ago the transports Kilpatrick and Sumner were used in bringing a number of school-teachers from Porto Rico to attend summer schools in this country. The object was laudable and the results, so far as I have learned, very beneficial. But there was no authority in law for the expenditure of $47,702.67 of the amount available for "Transporting the Army and its supplies" for such a purpose. Nor can any authority be found for the expenditure of $21,101.51 of the same funds for the trip of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to the West Indies. To make these expenditures the law was strained and a forced construction placed upon it. To the same funds were charged the expenses of the trip of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Isthmus of Panama and of similar trips of other Government officials. These trips had nothing to do with the transportation of the Army. They should not have been charged to the appropriations for such purposes. The expenditures should have been made either from moneys available for work in connection with the isthmian canal or from some other appropriate fund.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Such trips will no longer be made at the expense of this fund, as a provision in the pending bill prevents the use of this appropriation for the expense of using transports in any work other than the transportation of the Army and its supplies.

Another class of expenditures, equally objectionable from the standpoint of good administration and legislation, is in connection with the construction and repair of cables and of telegraph lines. All such work belongs to the Signal Corps. Appropriations are made for the work of the corps, yet a large sum is used yearly for such work in addition to the specific appropriations for it. For instance, the Quartermaster-General of the Army stated that the Burnside was used in this work last year at an expense of $169,908.07, which was charged to the appropriation for the "Transportation of the Army," although the work was of no value whatever to the Quartermaster's Department.

In the last fiscal year cable work in the Philippine Islands cost, for the charter, repair, etc., of the Proteus, $23,624.57; for repair and operation of Army transportation engaged in the same work, $46,219.79; for similar work on the Atlantic coast, with the Cyrus W. Field, $42,166.27, the Burnside, already mentioned, having been used on the Pacific coast at a cost of $169,908.07. In addition, $157,173.77 was expended for supplies, construction, transportation, in connection with the military telegraph system in Alaska, and $438,892.47, charged to the appropriations for transportation of the Army, which in reality was for cable and telegraph construction and repairs. These expenditures are possible only by a forced and unnatural construction of the law. The result is that work of an important and extensive character is done which is never considered nor authorized by Congress, but initiated and approved entirely within and by the Department of War.

In this bill there are two new items to which I will specifically refer at this time. One:

> For completing the equipment of military posts with the necessary lighters, launches, and yawls for submarine mine work, including the purchase of one torpedo planter for use on the Pacific coast, $150,000.

The other:

> For the construction of a seagoing cable ship of about 900 net tonnage for use in repairing and keeping in proper condition the fire-control submarine cables used in connection with the system of harbor defense on the Atlantic seaboard, $215,000.

Heretofore military posts were equipped with boats for submarine work out of the appropriations for "transportation of the Army." The language now used is "for completing" this work. Three torpedo planters have been provided in this way for the Atlantic coast. The estimate for the construction of the seagoing cable ship was included originally in the estimate for the "transportation of the Army;" but that estimate was reduced and the item separately submitted. Had that not been done, and had the entire amount asked for the transportation of the Army been allowed in this bill, it is more than likely that the ship would have been built and in service before anyone in Congress would have known of its existence.

These few instances in which appropriations for Army transportation have been diverted to other purposes have become known in a purely accidental manner. To what extent these appropriations have been diverted is not known. At this time it is not possible for me to suggest any amendment to the pending provision that will prevent such diversions. The committee has taken a step in the right direction. It should go much further.

Under a law that dates from 1812 the duty devolves upon the Quartermaster's Department of purchasing, furnishing, and distributing all military supplies for the use of the Army which other corps are not directed to provide, and the Army Regulations, after directing that the Quartermaster's Department shall have certain functions, further provide that it shall attend "to all matters connected with military operations which are not expressly assigned to some other bureau of the War Department."

While the duties imposed upon the Department are extremely broad, the language used in making appropriations for its work is seldom as comprehensive as that in which its duties are defined. It is sometimes forgotten that the fact that a Department is charged with the performance of certain work is not equivalent to an express grant to expend money for the performance of the duties charged. Last year the appropriation under this paragraph was $12,000,000; in this bill it is $11,750,000. The size of the available fund is the greatest temptation to use it.

To prevent further abuse a careful examination of the purposes to which the appropriations under this provision are put is imperative. The items should be classified and segregated under appropriate heads; definite appropriations should be made for specific purposes; expenditures should be rigidly restricted in accordance with the law. The result will be better and more efficient and more economical administration and more definite and intelligent legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee determined to rise; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 14397—the Army appropriation bill—and had come to no resolution thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. DARRAGH, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Joseph B. Riley, Fifty-seventh Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate concurrent resolutions of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 13:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 10,000 extra copies of the testimony taken by the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce in the consideration of the so-called "railroad rate bill," 3,000 for the use of the Senate and 7,000 for the use of the House of Representatives—

To the Committee on Printing.

Senate concurrent resolution No. 12:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 10,000 extra copies of the digest, prepared under the direction of the committee, of the testimony taken by the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce in the consideration of the so-called "railroad rate bill;" 3,000 for the use of the Senate, and 7,000 for the use of the House of Representatives—

To the Committee on Printing.

PEOPLE'S UNITED STATES BANK, ST. LOUIS, MO.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to submit the following resolution and ask for its passage.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution No. 341.

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to furnish the House of Representatives, at as early a date as practicable, a full statement of the facts, including copies of affidavits, papers, reports of inspectors and other officers under his control, bearing upon the order made by him withholding the rights and privileges of the mails from the People's United States Bank at St. Louis, Mo.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

He also presented petitions of the First National Bank of New Castle; the County National Bank, of Clearfield; the United States National Bank, of Johnstown; Burgettstown National Bank, of Burgettstown; the Pittsburg Clearing House Association, of Pittsburg; East Pittsburg National Bank, of Wilmerding; Second National Bank, of Titusville; National Bank of Carmichaels, of Carmichaels; First National Bank of Stoyestown; the First National Bank of Natrona; the First National Bank of Patton; the Southwark National Bank, of Philadelphia; the First National Bank of Derry; First National Bank of Philipsburg; the First National Bank of Grove City; Pioneer Dime Bank, of Carbondale; the People's National Bank, of Zelienople; Citizens' National Bank, of Meyersdale; First National Bank of Blairsville; the First National Bank of Addison; the People's National Bank, of East Brady; the First National Bank of Lebanon; First National Bank of McKeesport, and the People's National Bank, of Pittsburg, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation providing that national banks be allowed to loan 10 per cent of their capital and surplus; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DUBOIS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4543) allowing settlers with permanent improvements on town sites to buy the lots on which said improvements are located at an appraised price for cash, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Irrigation; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on February 19, 1906, directing the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to prepare a schedule of the improved lands in the Lemhi Reservation, of Idaho, ceded by the agreement of May 14, 1880, etc., intended to be proposed to the Indian appropriation bill, submitted a favorable report thereon, and moved that the report and accompanying papers be printed, and that the amendment and report be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3139) for the relief of Lorenzo A. Bailey, reported it without amendment, submitted a report thereon, and moved that it be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. GEARIN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 6936) granting an increase of pension to William Miller;

A bill (H. R. 10353) granting a pension to Thomas B. Davis; and

A bill (H. R. 11415) granting an increase of pension to Victoria Bishop.

Mr. CLAPP, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3704) to regulate the practice of dentistry or dental surgery in the Indian Territory, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4463) to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a sealer and assistant sealer of weights and measures in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FLINT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3743) to amend an act entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States," approved March 3, 1875, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BULKELEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4111) to authorize the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, to receive four 3.6-inch breech-loading field guns, carriages, caissons, limbers, and their pertaining equipment from the State of Connecticut, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HEMENWAY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 545) for the relief of the county of Custer, State of Montana, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4623) for the relief of Sarah E. Baxter, executrix of the last will and testament of Warren S. Baxter, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3622) for the relief of the heirs of Warren S. Baxter, deceased, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PETTUS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1477) to remove the charge of desertion now standing against James F. Wood, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4774) relating to the movements and anchorage of vessels in Hampton Roads, the harbors of Norfolk and Newport News, and adjacent waters, in the State of Virginia, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

YAKIMA INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10067) authorizing the disposition of surplus and unallotted lands on the Yakima Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, which can be irrigated under the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the "reclamation act," and for other purposes, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLVILLE INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

Mr. CLARK of Montana. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4229) to authorize the sale and disposition of surplus or unallotted lands of the diminished Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, and for other purposes, to report it favorably without amendment.

Mr. PILES. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Montana.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to ask the Senator from Washington if it is the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. PILES. The Committee on Indian Affairs reported the bill unanimously, I understand.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FULTON introduced a bill (S. 4797) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Franz; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PETTUS introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 4798) for the relief of Aaron C. Dean;

A bill (S. 4799) for the relief of James T. White;

A bill (S. 4800) for the relief of Thomas Seymour; and

A bill (S. 4801) for the relief of the estate of Sion Johnson, deceased.

Mr. CARTER (by request) introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 4802) for the relief of Morgan's Louisiana and Texas Railroad and Steamship Company, successor of the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad Company, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 4803) for the relief of Morgan's Louisiana and Texas Railroad and Steamship Company, assignee of a certain claim of Charles Morgan, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 4804) for the relief of the Galveston, Houston and Henderson Railroad Company, and for other purposes..

Mr. TALIAFERRO introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

A bill (S. 4805) to prohibit aliens from taking or gathering sponges in the waters of the United States; and

A bill (S. 4806) to prohibit the use of diving apparatus in the taking of sponges.

Mr. BURROWS introduced a bill (S. 4807) granting a pension to Helen M. Barrett; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4808) for the relief of the estate of Joshua Hill, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4809) for the relief of John Alexander Besonen; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4810) relating to bills of lading issued by carriers for the interstate transportation of property, and to certain obligations, duties, and rights in relation thereto; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. HEYBURN introduced a bill (S. 4811) granting a pension to Mae Spaulding; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FLINT introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 4812) granting an increase of pension to Mary C. Mulholland; and

A bill (S. 4813) granting an increase of pension to Samuel M. Doolittle.

Mr. BACON introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 4814) for the relief of B. C. Thompson;

A bill (S. 4815) for the relief of Benjamin Franklin Woodall (with an accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 4816) for the relief of the estate of George N. Anderson, deceased (with an accompanying paper).

Mr. KNOX introduced a bill (S. 4817) granting an increase of pension to Delight R. Allen; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SPOONER introduced a bill (S. 4818) granting an increase of pension to George W. Peabody; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4819) for the relief of M. A. Johnson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 4820) granting an increase of pension to Hartwell Danforth; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4821) granting an increase of pension to John E. Stewart; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CLAY introduced a bill (S. 4822) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Wiley Franks, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McCREARY introduced a bill (S. 4823) for the relief of Madison County, Ky.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4824) for the relief of the estate of Dr. O. P. Hill, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. NELSON introduced a bill (S. 4825) to provide for the construction of a bridge across Rainy River, in the State of Minnesota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. KITTREDGE submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $17,000 for general repairs and improvements, for cement veneer for old buildings, and for industrial and domestic science building at the Flandreau Indian School, South Dakota, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GAMBLE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,500 for the improvement of the Hope Indian School at Springfield, S. Dak., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PETTUS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 4) to amend section 3646, Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act of February 16, 1885; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HANSBROUGH submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12707) to enable the people of Oklahoma and of the Indian Territory to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; and to enable the people of New Mexico and of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; which were ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 14589. An act to authorize the Cairo and Tennessee River Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River; and

H. R. 14590. An act to authorize the Cairo and Tennessee River Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Cumberland River.

H. R. 10101. An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and convey to the State of Minnesota a certain tract of land situated in the county of Dakota, State of Minnesota, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

PATRICK FALLIHEE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1465) granting an increase of pension to Patrick Fallihee, which was, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "forty" and insert "thirty."

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

COURTS IN FLORIDA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill (H. R. 10080) to provide for sittings of the United States circuit and district courts of the southern district of Florida at the city of Miami, in said district, and calls the attention of the junior Senator from Florida to it.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I ask that the bill just laid before the Senate be substituted for Senate bill 4115, now on the Calendar, being Order of Business 1313. The title of the bill is identical.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection to the request of the Senator from Florida, it will be so ordered.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I move that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I ask that what is commonly known as the "railroad rate bill" be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read by its title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. DOLLIVER addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. House bill 12707, the statehood bill so called.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside until the Senator from Iowa shall have concluded his remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I think that everybody familiar with the business of the Senate will bear witness to the fact that I have very seldom intruded upon your time for the discussion of public questions or for the presentation of my own views of these matters, and I confess that I approach this discussion with very great reluctance, amounting to timidity, not only because of the difficulty of the questions which are involved, but because I speak in the presence of men who, by reason of their experience and their wisdom, are better able than I am to debate it.

I desire to acknowledge, before I go any further, the obligation I am under to the counsel and guidance of the venerable Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], unfortunately detained by sickness from the Chamber at this time. I acknowledge my indebtedness to him, because his name is associated with the efforts which during the last twenty years the American people have been making to secure a measure at least of that control of interstate commerce which is confided to them by the Constitution of the United States. His public service is identified in honorable distinction with the original interstate-commerce law, and the amendment proposed to that law, which constitutes the chief feature of the pending bill, does not differ in substance or purpose from that which he introduced in the Fifty-seventh Congress and has ever since advocated as a necessary addition to the failing powers and influence of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

I think I may also be pardoned if I refer to the measure introduced in a former Congress by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], and defended by him then and ever since with that intuitive good sense with which he has so often lighted up our pathway.

I do not believe it would be fair either if I omitted to refer to the fact that in 1897 the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], who spoke so ably and learnedly here yesterday, introduced into this body a bill containing a grant to the Interstate Commerce Commission of many of the powers which he condemned here yesterday as unconstitutional and in violation of sound principles.

I may say the same thing for my honored friend [Mr. ELKINS], the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee, because in the last Congress he had pending here a bill drawn under the advice, as I am informed, of the late Judge Logan, general counsel of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, which conferred upon the Commission the exact powers that are now condemned in this Chamber as in violation of the Constitution of the United States.

I allude to these matters for two reasons, first for the purpose of giving honor where honor is due, and again for the purpose of protecting us, as far as I can, from the sneer that has become quite common in the corridors of the Capitol that we are acting in response to a hasty agitation that has been brought upon Congress by the enthusiasm of another Department of the Government.

I am glad for one, though I do not know what anybody else may think about it, that this question does not involve any of the differences of our partisan politics. There are, fortunately for institutions like ours, some questions so far reaching in their significance that political parties have not divided upon them, and ought not in view of the interests that are at stake to permit themselves to be drawn up by enterprising stage managers in pantomimic battle array in the Senate or in the country.

This question is one of these, and in speaking upon it I speak not as a Republican, though I have loved the old leadership of the Republican party with an affection that has never wavered since, in 1876, I stumped the State of West Virginia for Hayes and Wheeler. I speak as a Senator of the United States, representing here the convictions of nearly 3,000,000 people, yonder between the great rivers, and I feel sure that I betray no interest of theirs when I ask every man, without regard to his political party, to unite together in the effort which the American people are now making to bring the Government of the United States to an effective exercise of the power conferred upon Congress in the wisdom of our fathers for the benefit of the whole community.

It is my purpose, by the kindness of your attention, to speak on several phases of this question, some of them historical, others legal, and others again suggested by that larger outlook upon the national life which has become characteristic of these times.

It is a good deal of a wilderness we have to wander about in, and I confess with some regret that the preoccupations of my routine affairs here have been such that I have been barely able to find a few pathways into it, and have had time only to set up a few landmarks as a sort of guide to my feet in trying to make a way through it.

I think it will contribute to the orderly development of what I have to say if I state at the beginning exactly what amendments are proposed to the interstate-commerce law of 1887. I know that it will be satisfactory to nearly all of you when I say that the great body of that law has been left absolutely undisturbed by this bill. It has been on the statute books nigh on to twenty years, and owing to the subjects with which it deals it has had a rather stormy experience in the courts, so that its rough places have been worn smooth and its obscure phraseology has been made clear. So great an advantage as that ought not certainly to be thrown away, even if it were possible to rewrite the statute in a more perfect form.

The fundamental prohibitions of that law relating to excessive charges, to discriminations that are unjust and unreasonable, to undue preferences between persons and places and particular descriptions of traffic, are plain enough, and while a good many suggestions have been made to change them it has, on the whole, been thought best to leave them exactly as they are.

The same thing can be said of section 5 of the law, that section which prohibits agreements for the pooling of freight traffic and for the division of the earnings of competing railway lines. That is left undisturbed, though I ought, dealing in candor with the Senate, to say that, in my humble opinion, the time is coming when the principles involved in that section ought to be reconsidered by Congress.

It will be seen, therefore, that this bill instead of undermining the interstate-commerce law in reality fortifies and reenforces it, preserving intact those great commandments which lie at the foundation of industrial peace in the United States. They constitute a bill of commercial rights so complete that they are entitled to all the encomiums they have received in the railway literature of our language. If that law had been obediently accepted by the railway world and by the business community—for both have been parties to its nullification—if it had been treated with that reverence and sancity without which the laws of the land become a mere echo of vain moral aspirations, if they had been violated only by bad men, indifferent to the disgrace of lawlessness, the American people, if they had demanded its amendment at all, would have approached the subject in a frame of mind somewhat different from that which has actuated the present agitation in some sections of the country. The defects of that law lay not in an imperfect definition of the rights and duties of carriers, but in the failure rather to anticipate the motives that would press in from a thousand different directions to defeat the principles embodied in it.

Let me state exactly what amendments are proposed, and, if you will permit me, I will pass over without a word all of them which are minor in their significance, in order that I may get the attention of the Senate to the three conspicuous propositions with which this measure is concerned.

First of all, section 1 of the law was incomplete on account of a defective, or, I think rather I ought to say, an inadequate definition of the word "transportation." As defined in the bill, it had in practical operation this effect: It left the shippers, and especially shippers dealing in perishable products like fruit and vegetables and meats and others of a similar character, doing business not only with the carrier, but with an outside corporation, often entirely independent of the carrier, who charged, in addition to the charge made by the carrier, practically what it pleased for certain incidental services rendered in connection with the shipment; and if the shipper complains to the railroad about these charges he is informed that the charges are made by a car company with which the railroad has nothing to do; and when his complaint is presented to the car company, he is advised that the interstate-commerce law, or what has now come to be known as the legislative power of Congress, does not reach a car company renting cars in Chicago or running an ice house in New Jersey. So the shipper has been left in the hands of the Philistines. I have a job lot of these freight bills here, showing exactly how this additional charge which the railway does not make at all is made, the like of which have become painfully familiar to shippers of fruit and vegetables and other perishable products all over the United States. So flagrant have these abuses grown that even our greatest railways have not been able to protect themselves, much less their patrons, against these extortions and wrongs. Last summer a great national organization of producers and shippers and merchants met together and demanded that Congress entirely abolish private freight cars by making it unlawful for a railroad transacting interstate business to carry one of them. I do not agree with that position.

I think it would injuriously limit the facilities of commerce, and I have lived here in the last few months in such an atmosphere of constitutional doubts that I begin to suspect that perhaps such a proposition might not pass the scrutiny of the courts. At any rate, it is obvious to nearly everybody that the ordinary railroad, having use for refrigerator cars only for a few days each year on its line, could not economically own them. Therefore, in framing this bill, we have left the railroads free to do exactly as they do now, in renting on any terms which they find satisfactory these cars, so that they can be kept in use the year round and sent where they are needed. This measure, therefore, does not make their use illegal; it leaves this $100,000,000 worth of equipment within reach of the railways of the country, but it requires the carrier to deal with the car company and the shipper to deal only with the carrier. It compels the railway company to make itself the sole beneficiary of the moneys paid for the shipment of merchandise. It follows that if this measure becomes a law all these extra charges must be computed in the transportation rate, subject to all the provisions of the interstate-commerce act; so that if they are unreasonable, or unjustly discriminatory, they can be dealt with as the statute provides. This is the first reform which this bill introduces into the existing law.

Having thus broadened the meaning of the word "transportation," by requiring that every charge incident to the service shall be reckoned as a part of the published rate, the second purpose of the bill is to provide a tribunal for the prompt and effective settlement of those controversies, likely, as I believe to become less and less numerous, which arise between the roads and their patrons growing out of alleged violations of the law. Numerous suggestions have been considered for the creation of extraordinary tribunals, administrative or judicial, before which these complaints may be presented for trial. Without disparaging any of these plans, for many of them—notably that suggested by Judge Grosscup—contain elements of wisdom, it has been deemed necessary to materially modify the machinery for enforcing the law created by the act of 1887.

It has, I know, become fashionable to belittle and underestimate the work which has been accomplished by the Interstate Commerce Commission; and I confess that in the earlier stages of my meditations upon this subject I may have joined with the multitude to do that overworked and underpaid body that injustice. I had the opinion that the interstate-commerce law had been a failure, and, in common with others, I found it easier to attribute it to its feeble administration than to anything else.

I have had the opportunity to examine with patient attention the proceedings of the Interstate Commerce Commission from the day when Judge Cooley first called it to order. I have read its decisions scattered through ten volumes of reported cases, and I will not now, whatever my prejudices may have been in other years, withhold from the faithful and conscientious men who have occupied places upon that board a sincere tribute to the fidelity and fair-minded ability which is illustrated in the record of the work which they have done. It may be true, as the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] said yesterday, I thought rather cheerfully, that they have made findings which in a few cases have been overruled by the courts, but the great mass of the work which they have done in promoting a harmonious relation between the railways and the business community did not find its way into the courts at all. And if the eminent counsel who have represented the railways before the Commission always had shown that respect for the law which would have led them to deal with the Commission in the presentation of their evidence as they would deal with the courts, they would not have invited the rebuke to the profession which the Supreme Court upon one occasion felt constrained to make; and it is possible that the meager list of the decisions of the Commission found erroneous on review would have been very much shorter during this twenty years.

I deprecate the tone of alarm with which the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] speaks of this legislation. I am not one of those who look forward to an era of perpetual hostility between the railways of the United States and the business community, of which, in the words of Mr. Justice Harlan, they are the servants. I surely would be the last one who would encourage such a thing; there ought to be no vendetta between the American people and the transportation interests of the country. I am prepared to accept as true much of what the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] has said about the success which on the whole has attended the work of the traffic departments of our great railways in their relations to the people. It would be a strange world in which everything should go naturally to the bad. I am a believer in a good old-fashioned theology which has kept me free from many forms of anxiety. If God made this world we ought not to be surprised to find that on the whole it is a good world, with a million forces moving things in the right direction where one pushes it in the wrong. I accept the doctrine that the laws which control the market place in common with the other laws which govern the world are like the Great Lawgiver, from everlasting to everlasting, and that we ought not to leave out of the account the infinite forces which make for righteousness and fair dealing when we undertake to frame statutes auxiliary and curative in their purpose.

So I have refused utterly to get excited or to listen to those who want to create new instruments of torture for the railway systems of the United States—formidable-looking apparatus for the management of troubles that may never come. I have a strong conviction that within five years there will be established in every traffic district of the United States voluntary boards of conciliation, either put into operation by the railways themselves or, better still, authorized by Congress, in which the traffic managers and the business community, by their representatives, may sit down quietly once or twice in every year to discuss grievances and to make the public familiar with the theory and practice of railway rate making. My solemn conviction is that as time goes on this proposed power of the Interstate Commerce Commission will be a last resort and an ultimate appeal, so rare as to become occasional and exceptional in its character.

I have been depressed and discouraged in the last week more than I can say here. It has kept coming into my heart that there ought to be statesmanship enough in Congress and wisdom enough in the great leaders of business to keep the peace of the market. To my mind it is inconceivable that a legitimate property interest, representing one-sixth of the national wealth, should be allowed to drift into an attitude where its hand shall be against every man and every man's hand against it. Therefore this bill, aside from adding to the number and the salary of the Commission, takes the risk of accepting the machinery with which we have been familiar for twenty years.

The amendment which is proposed defines and enlarges the power of the Commission by authorizing it, where complaint is made that a rate is unreasonable or unduly preferential, to require the carrier to observe as a maximum in such a case the rate which, in its judgment, is in conformity with law, taking away from the carrier no part of the legal redress in the courts which belongs to it under the Constitution of the United States. Here is the battle ground of this controversy, and unless I get entirely lost in the woods that surround it, I will try to make my way back to it before I conclude what I have to say.

The third reform which this bill undertakes to make in the methods of dealing with railroad abuses is found in the amendment proposed to section 20, which requires a detailed report of the business of the railways, compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to conform their system of accounts to the regulations made by the Commission and to keep them open to reasonable inspection under public authority. It is the purpose of that provision to do for American railroads what they have apparently been unable to do for themselves in the eradication of secret practices through which the law has been systematically evaded even by the most reputable railway managements in the country.

I can not altogether agree with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] that these secret practices have been abandoned, though I join with him in the tribute which he pays to the Elkins law. I will admit that the very awkwardness of our attempts to regulate interstate commerce has contributed to the practice of rebates and secret rate agreements with favored shippers. We have required all rates to be published and at the same time, in the faint hope of preserving what is left of competition, have treated all rate agreements as an unlawful restraint of commerce. It is obvious that where there is more than one road between two points all must have the same rate whether they agree upon it or not; so that the only possibility of competition that is left in such a case is a secret underbidding of the rate by the least scrupulous of the roads. But, be that as it may, there can be no worse affliction of our market place than these underground transactions which destroy the equality which the law requires to be observed among individual shippers.

The honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has said on this floor that the power to fix a maximum rate gives no redress against the practice of rebates because the opportunity is the same and the temptation the same to covertly depart from a rate made by the Government as from a rate made by the roads themselves. That is literally true. Therefore unless provision is made to have every account book, record, or memorandum relating to the receipt and disbursement of money by these corporations brought under the open eye of national authority, the prospect of abating these evils is remote. There is no difficulty about punishing the crime of giving rebates, except the difficulty of finding it out. We have gone as far already in penalizing this offense as we need go; but we have made no progress whatever in searching out the offense. This bill takes a long-delayed step in that direction, and I look upon it as a fortunate thing that everybody is agreed that the step ought to be taken.

I have now spoken of the three principal things which this measure attempts to do, and according to my promise I will now go back to the battle ground—the question of enlarging the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission by amending section 15 of the existing law. Such an amendment is from every point of view imperative. In the first place, that section of the law is ambiguous in its meaning.

It has been said that under its provisions the Commission for ten years exercised a power which was finally taken away from it by the Supreme Court of the United States. A careful examination of the record shows that that is partly true. On the other hand it has been said that the power to fix rates was from the beginning disputed by the railroads, disclaimed by the Commission, and denied by the courts; and that is partly true. My own belief is that if the Commission had gone on following in the footsteps of the original board, confining its orders to specific cases of unreasonable or unreasonably discriminatory rates, such a question as to its power would never have been raised, because there is much in the spirit and purpose of the original law from which the right to exercise such a power in a limited way, as Judge Cooley exercised it in the case in which he changed the classification of a specific article of merchandise, might be reasonably inferred.

I have heard it said that the decision of the Supreme Court in the Maximum Rate case, decided in 1897, broke the back of the Commission; and I have heard that great tribunal assailed and maligned because it took away from the Commission the powers which had been conferred upon it by Congress.

It has been a part of my duty to examine the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission in that case, and to read again and again the opinion of the Supreme Court respecting its power to make that order, and I find myself in perfect accord with the disposition which was made of the question. To my mind the court was right in thinking that if Congress had intended to confer such a power upon the Commission it would have said so. The power to bring into judgment a score of railways, serving different sections of the country, and a hundred cities seeking access to the same market, and to balance their claims and pass sentence upon their commercial opportunities, was a jurisdiction so far-reaching that the learned judges might well hesitate to search for it among the inferences and implications and general tendencies resting vaguely in the spirit and purposes of the statute.

But even the power which the Commission attempted to exercise in that case was one of very doubtful value, just about the same power they would have if my friends who are now tiptoeing about this Chamber whispering to one another about the day in court, because the most that could be said for its orders was that they might be made the basis of a lawsuit, endless for practical purposes in time, and so complicated as to baffle the patience of the courts of justice. We are not, therefore, attempting to restore the power which the Commission lost by that decision. No careful student of this problem would do that if he could, and no Congress, in my opinion, will ever enact a law to take the development of widely separated regions, the interests of competing markets, the growth of rival seaports contending for the prizes of the ocean out of the hands of the railways which have grown up with them, and the natural laws of business which have created them, and stake their worldly prospects on the decision of any earthly tribunal even if its salary were raised to correspond with the size of such a job.

A power like that would have to be exercised by more than human wisdom if it did not lead us into sectional conflicts, based upon commercial advantages, which would shake the foundations of the Government more rudely than the New England townships, according to the testimony of Thomas Jefferson, shook them in his day, and more disastrously than the planting interests of the South shook them on the issue arising out of the regulation of foreign commerce a generation afterwards. It is needless therefore for me to say that the proposition contained in this bill does not undertake to do such a thing.

Section 15 of the act of 1887, as it is proposed to amend it, simply authorizes the Commission in case a complaint is made that a rate is unreasonable, either because it is too high or because it works a discrimination forbidden by law, or is accompanied by an unreasonable regulation or practice relating to it, to inquire into the matter, and to make an order establishing a reasonable maximum rate applicable to the case and correcting the practice found unlawful by directing the carrier to cease and desist from it. It does not give the Commission power to fix the rate. It recognizes that substantial advantages may accrue to the community by preserving the right of the carrier to initiate and control the rate within the limit fixed by the Commission. But in justice to the public it determines the line above which the rate shall not go. It provides also for the apportionment of joint rates put in effect by the Commission where the carriers are not able to make a satisfactory division, and authorizes the Commission, after hearing the complaint, to require the establishment of through routes where there is no convenient and satisfactory through line already in operation, and to determine the rate applicable to such routes.

Section 1 requires the railroads to establish through routes and just and reasonable joint rates applicable to them. Section 15 as amended proposes that if the railroads do not do that and complaint is made the Commission shall establish and put in operation through routes and joint rates applicable to them. My honorable friend from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] says that is one of the particularly unconstitutional parts of this bill. But suppose that provision were not in this bill; suppose his theory is correct, that it is unconstitutional to require a railroad to make a through route with a joint rate applicable to it; what follows? Any railroad in America engaged in interstate commerce may escape the jurisdiction of the law altogether by the simple expedient of canceling out its joint rates. Will anybody who at all believes in the authority of the Government over this subject suppose for a moment that that could be allowed?

The bill goes a step further, and in view of the fact that so large a portion of the commerce of the country is hauled by railways for persons who own both the cars and the contents of them as well as other facilities connected with the shipment, authorizes the Commission, with a view to prevent discriminations in some respects the most odious which now exist in our market place, to determine the allowance to be made by the carrier to the shipper for the use of the facilities which he furnishes.

Such are the provisions, briefly stated, of the proposed amendment. It need not be said, yet there is no danger of overstating the truth, that no legislation affecting the railway problem can be of any value to the community unless it is based upon a solid foundation of right and justice. Therefore, whoever approaches these questions in an atmosphere of prejudice, or with a purpose soured by malice and hostility against the railroads, is likely to contribute little or nothing to their permanent solution.

Whether the position which I shall take is approved by anybody, whether the words which I shall speak are believed by anybody, I venture to express the hope that I may be acquitted of that most grievous offense which can be committed against the proprieties of a place like this—the offense of exploiting here either my own prejudices or the incoherent clamor of others against the corporations with which this legislation is concerned. I am a believer in the law of property which we have inherited from our fathers, and I look upon the statutes creating the modern business corporation as the most important step ever taken in the history of civilization to bring the resources of the world into the service of the human race. If a proposal were pending here to wrong or oppress our fellow-citizens who have invested their capital in the railways of the United States, such are the principles which have guided my thinking from the days of my youth that I would challenge the pressure of public opinion, however arrogant, in defense of the rights of property. For while nearly all of us are poor in this world's goods, even if our names are carried on the rolls of the Senate—though it is hardly possible at this day to overtake the popular fiction which disputes that—the American people as a whole are still eager and hopeful in the battle of life, with energies bent upon the accumulation of a competency for themselves and their children, and it will be a sorrowful menace to our institutions if the time should come when even a considerable number of them lose out of their hearts the ambition of honorable worldly success and either fall back contentedly into a social class to which they find themselves condemned by their surroundings or join the insignificant minority which is already in every nation plotting for the overthrow of the existing order of society.

If, then, anybody expects me to approach this question with indifference to the great property interests which it involves, or to exhibit that intemperate bigotry which shuts its eyes to the advantage which has accrued to the American people through the labors of those who within the space of a single lifetime have spread out upon this continent a network of steel like the nerves of a living creature, I will have to disappoint such a one. This measure is no act of hostility to the American railway system. It is a step in the direction of a better understanding between the industries and commerce of the community and the magnificent instrumentalities through which both have been made possible. Not a line of it has been drawn in malice toward any legitimate American enterprise. Every word of it is intended to convey the good will of the people of the United States toward that form of property which more than any other is bound up in an absolute unity of interest with the prosperity of the whole market place.

Something has been said by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] about the "knock-down-and-drag-out" character of the argument for this measure. If he examines it, he will see that the popular agitation which has accompanied the proposal to amend the interstate-commerce law has differed altogether from any previous movement of public opinion upon kindred subjects at least in one important particular. There has been nothing about it revolutionary, and unless we confound earnestness with radicalism, nothing unreasonable or extreme. It was based upon the grievances of shippers and united in its support, at least at the outset, the commercial bodies of our cities, great and small; and if, during the years which have elapsed since that memorable petition was presented to Congress, elements less conservative have attached themselves to the agitation, that fact can not be set down in disparagement of the cause, but rather in reproach of those legislative delays which, however perfectly we understand them here, seem to the outside world like indifference and neglect.

But if some of those who have given expression to the public demand have indulged in noisy declamation; if shrewd and unscrupulous irritation of the public mind has sometimes taken the place of its wise guidance and instruction, that fault is one which has unfortunately affected both sides of the controversy. If demagogues, whose business is politics, and merchants, whose politics is business, have crowded one another in the presentation of the popular complaint, we have no right to resent that here; for long before the politicians heard of this matter; long before the professional reformers began to perceive the earning power of the movement, the petition of that quiet and least demonstrative section of the public, which in the quaint parlance of the English law goes by the name of the "traders," was sleeping peacefully in the files of both Houses of Congress.

So that if anybody has the right to protest against the spirit in which this great public demand has been presented, the other side of the question has not been altogether without its infirmities. If the witnesses who appeared for the railways before the Interstate Commerce Committee have good ground to resent the description of the charges which are made for the services which the railroad performs as "taxes," thereby communicating to them the odium which accompanies those public levies which Mr. Emerson says have always been unpopular because nobody thinks he gets what he pays for, these amiable railway magnates themselves, when drawn rather abruptly from the dull routine of their affairs to the exhilirating task of molding the opinions of the people, have not proved altogether unadapted to the demands of magazine advertisement or insensible to the fascinations of the Chautauqua salute.

While one side has been industriously stamping the unpalatable word "taxes" upon the traffic sheets of the railway companies, the other, with equal ingenuity, has been trying to tag the Government of the United States, engaged in discharging its function under the Constitution, as a rate fixer, a meddlesome intruder into private business.

So that if the people of the United States have something to learn about the nature and justification of a railway rate, the accomplished gentlemen who have been selected to manage our railway properties have also something to learn about their relations to the public policy of the United States. I confess a certain degree of surprise that, after all that has happened in the world, and especially in the English-speaking world, it should be necessary for anybody to restate the position of public-service corporations under the laws of the land; but when so adroit and learned a lawyer as Mr. Richard Olney, formerly Secretary of State, writes of the Government regulation of railways exactly as if the law were attempting an unwarranted interference with the sacredness of private property, and solemnly disputes the power of Congress to discharge the very duty which the Constitution expressly assigns to it, it is time for some one who does not have to unload a lot of railway securities in order to acquire the spiritual preparation needed for the task to dig up a few first principles, if only to exhibit them as a background to the educational campaign which has been going on in the United States.

I do not know what business Mr. Olney is in now, but as I perused the North American Review containing his ponderous essay on this subject, with its curious warning to Congress not to exercise its power for fear that the States, misled by its example, might be tempted to exercise theirs, and seriously attempting to prove that the correction of unreasonable railway rates is substantially the same thing as the Government ownership of railroads and equally in contravention of our fundamental law, I found it hard to believe that this is the same man who, when he was Attorney-General, searching that simple clause of the Constitution found power enough in it to send the Army across the borders of Illinois and over riotous city limits, against the protests of panic-stricken mayors and screaming governors, to keep the peace of the United States and to open the highways of interstate traffic to the American people. I do not know what has come over the spirit of the old Attorney-General, but he is certainly not as vigorous as he once was. It may be that in trying to protect the Constitution of the United States he has broken down his own, or it may be he is suffering from the effects of the pamphlets which swarmed in the mails during the past summer. [Laughter.]

We are not dealing with private property in this bill, but if we were we have the warrant of our great charter for dealing with it. But for the limitations of that instrument the political sovereignty which resides in the American people could make strange havoc with the law of private property, subject to no prohibition except the moral restraint arising from the nature and purposes of civil society. If you seek to know what the limits of national sovereignty are in dealing with private property examine carefully the epoch-making speech of Mr. Gladstone on the proposed intervention of the English Government to break up a system of land tenure founded in prescriptive right and guarded by all the sanctions of the law which had left the population of Ireland naked and helpless, a menace to the social and political life of the Empire. But in exercising its authority over common carriers, whether derived from inherent sovereignty or constitutional grant, the nation does not depart from the beaten path of precedent and tradition. I venture the assertion that there never was in the history of the world an organized political community in which commerce was sufficiently developed to bring into existence any form of internal transportation, however crude, which did not put the hand of public authority upon the rates to be collected from those who availed themselves of the vehicles which were offered for hire.

I was very much interested when the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] carried us back to the Nile and to the Euphrates and to many an ancient river and showed us the means of travel and communication that the boys enjoyed in those far-off times. [Laughter.] While he was doing it, knowing his real skill as a man of learning, I wondered how it happened he had not run across some of the customs that prevailed in early days in respect to this matter. I confess I am more interested in these than I am in the shape of the wagon wheels, because they throw a more perfect light upon the theory of the social order of which we are a part.

Professor Harper, the American scholar who occupies the chair of Semitic languages in the University of Chicago, a brother of the late Doctor Harper, president of that institution, whose untimely death has filled the whole academic world with sorrow (his brother and he collaborating together), not very many years ago made a very interesting contribution to the history of civilization by deciphering an old monument dug up in Persepolis, which had been erected in Babylon in the reign of the sixth king of the first dynasty, twenty-two hundred and fifty years before Christ. It seems from the translation that the monument contained a revision of old laws. It recited that the king had rebuilt the canals and rebuilt cities and restored the temples and reunited the nationality of his people. I have here this code of Hammurabi, older than the Hebrew Decalogue, older even than Abraham sitting before his tent, and for the benefit of those who have been led to believe that the supervision of government in the business of transportation is an innovation traceable to recent Presidential messages, I will read some extracts from it:

SEC. 271. If a man hire oxen, a wagon, and a driver, he shall pay 180 KA of grain per day.

SEC. 272. If he hire a wagon only, he shall pay 40 KA of grain per day.

SEC. 276. If a man hire a sailboat, he shall pay 2⅔ SE of silver per day as its hire.

SEC. 277. If a man hire a boat of 60 GUR (tonnage), he shall pay one-sixth of a shekel of silver as its hire per day.

I will not read any further. I have read enough to show the pressing need there must have been for the work of a literary bureau in Babylon. [Laughter.]

So far as we are concerned we have inherited our language, our literature, our institutions, and our jurisprudence from a nation which illustrates better than any other the attitude that ought to be maintained by a civilized community toward the instrumentalities of commerce and of business. These two nations, while they differ in a good many respects, are singularly akin in their commercial instincts and in their general sense of what Anglo-Saxon justice requires. Neither of them developed the modern system of transportation very early.

I got hold of a book the other day on Social life in the reign of Queen Anne. It was by an English writer by the name of John Ashton, and the book reads as if the man understood the art of looking into those obscure places where the historian gets hold of his real material. I was interested in his statement that in that reign the pack horse was still in use for ordinary traffic throughout the Kingdom, although pack wagons had been introduced, and he preserves an advertisement of a fellow who was running a line of wagons between London and the important towns in the Kingdom—a very interesting advertisement. It told the price and gave the time table, and then it said, "Performed if God permits by Ebenezer Brookes." [Laughter.] You will notice that is similar to the philosophy of the president of the Reading Railroad: Performed by the will of God. Yet if the eminent educational specialists now doing such a good business in the United States expect the inland traffic of this country to be managed entirely under divine auspices, they will have to go back for their precedents in their social progress of the world at least beyond the reign of Queen Anne. For as early as 1691, in chapter 12, section 24, of the third year of the reign of William and Mary, we find it enacted:

That the justices of the peace of every county and other place within the realm of England or dominion of Wales shall have the power and authority, and are hereby enjoined and required at their next session after Easter day, yearly to assess and rate the prices of all land carriage of goods whatsoever to be brought into any place or places within their respective limits and jurisdiction by any common carrier or wagoner, and the rates and assessments so made to certify to the several wagoners and other chief officers of each respective market town, to which all persons may resort for information; and that no such common carrier or wagoner shall take for carriage of such goods and merchandise above the rates and prices set upon pain to forfeit for every such offense the sum of £5, to be levied by distress and sale of his or their goods by warrant of any two justices of the peace where such carrier or wagoner shall reside to the use of the party aggrieved. (2 Bac. Abr., 160.)

Our ancestors evidently were not as particular as the Babylonians about this business, since they do not appear to have exercised this power of fixing maximum rates by a commission until the folks who were engaged in the business of common carriers had begun to manifest a tendency, never since entirely wanting in this honorable occupation, to establish a sort of community of interest for the symmetrical stimulation of their receipts, for I notice that a preamble accompanies this section of the act of 1691, which reads as follows:

And whereas divers wagoners and other carriers by combination amongst themselves have raised the prices of carriage of goods in many places to excessive rates, to the great injury of trade.

It seems also that they were not blind to the value which accrued to the community from the business of the carriers, for the preamble to chapter 12 of the same act of Parliament distinctly says:

Whereas the free and easy intercourse and means of conveying goods and merchandise from one market town to another contributes very much to the advancement of trade, increase of wealth, and raising the value of lands, as well as to the ease and convenience of the subjects in general.

But while these benefits were not forgotten they seem to have been fatally bent upon meddling with these matters, for we find in the twenty-fourth year of the reign of George II an act was passed appointing commissioners for regulating the navigation of the Thames and fixing the price of water carriage, the preamble of which recites some of the reasons for this particularly annoying bit of legislation:

Whereas divers abuses have heretofore been and still are committed by the owners of the several towing paths and other passages on the banks of said rivers, and by the owners of the locks, weirs, turnpikes, dams, flood gates, and other engines in and upon or near and adjoining to the said rivers, and also by the several bargemasters and their servants navigating thereon, by reason whereof and other exactions the price of water carriage on those rivers hath of late years been very much raised, contrary to the intent and provision of divers wholesome and good laws made and passed for the due regulation of said navigation.

I will not inquire into the wisdom of these acts of Parliament; I only refer to them to show that there had been no campaign of education in England up to that time; and as the years passed our ancestors descended to particulars still more minute, for Parliament laid violent hands upon even such humble servitors of the public convenience as the hack drivers of England and, overlooking the inalienable right of the citizen to enter into private contracts on terms mutually agreeable to the parties concerned, solemnly enacted statutes fixing hackney fares throughout the Kingdom. An evil example surely, since it has been followed by every city and village in the world, including the capital of the United States, where Congress is the sole legislative authority; and we have contrived that act of oppression not in the open arena of debate, but through an administrative commission, which we have created to attend to the minor details of the District government. The victim of such an act of oppression may be an old colored man shivering in front of the Baltimore and Ohio depot. He may be the owner of the horse which he drives, eking out a miserable existence; but such is the tenderness of civilization toward the stranger within its gates that the driver is denied, by act of Congress, the poor privilege of making a bargain for the service which he renders, even with millionaire philanthropists.

We have been accustomed to base the right of the Government to interpose in matters of transportation upon too narrow a principle. Surely the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] fell into this error. In our anxiety to make the intervention as agreeable as possible to those who are affected by it it has been usual to say that it is based upon the fact that railways enjoy certain franchises; that they exercise by permission of the State certain of its sovereign attributes, and that therefore the State has the right to step in between them and their customers; but the case of the old colored hackman, sitting in the rain in front of the Baltimore and Ohio depot on the box of his coupe, behind his own horse, waiting for customers till the midnight hour, would seem to indicate that the power of the State in such matters has a broader foundation than that. And so it has. The power of Congress over interstate commerce would be just as complete if no railroad had ever exercised the power of eminent domain, if it had enjoyed at the hands of the State no franchise or concession of any sort. If it were literally the creation of private capital, unassisted in any respect by public contributions, it would still be face to face with the sovereign authority. It is not alone on account of the privileges which common carriers enjoy that a nation reserves to itself this power to regulate them. It is on account of the nature of the business in which they are engaged and the relation to the community of the service which they render.

The wagoners of the time of William and Mary meeting together to divide the spoils were made to understand that; and it will save us a good deal of trouble in the United States in the next twenty years if the great railway managers, holding their quiet conferences to perfect plans for the new exploits of high finance, could come gradually to a realizing sense of that.

It must, however, be granted in all fairness and candor that this disability of railway property to which I have alluded, this hereditary trait never lost sight of for a moment by the courts of the United States from the first operation of railway trains until now, does not license the State to descend upon these corporations with reckless disregard to their welfare. The very infirmity of their title, the incumbrance that is upon them in the very essence of their being, gives them a peculiar claim upon the friendly oversight of the law both in their organization and in their administration, in order to promote the security of investments of actual capital in them and the maintenance of a stable basis of profits in their operation.

It must be confessed, with proper humiliation, that the history of railway building and railway management does not exhibit the wisdom of the lawmaking power in an altogether enviable light, either in England or America. There has been no lack of statesmanship in either country in the last century, but such have been the preoccupations of Parliaments and Congresses with wars and tariffs, with slaveries, with banking and currency and the coinage of money, that the energy and enterprise which projected and organized the building and operation of the railways have surpassed, on an almost immeasurable scale, the legislative foresight with which they have been directed and governed.

There never has been a time, certainly not since the great opinion of Marshall in Gibbons v. Ogden, when any shadow has rested upon the sovereign prerogatives of the State over the commerce of the people, unless the speech of the Senator from Ohio yesterday is such a cloud. Yet from 1826, when the first American locomotive was puffing and wheezing on the rude tramway at Quincy, Mass., carrying down to the sea the granite blocks out of which Bunker Hill Monument was built, it was more than forty years before Charles Sumner introduced into this Chamber the first act to regulate commerce among the States, and it was twenty years longer before the interstate-commerce law was passed which we have been trying to amend. They were troubled and uncertain years, to be sure. If there was anybody who seemed to understand the practical economic effects of the railway on the life of the people, I can find only a very dim record of it in our public annals. Everybody was enthusiastic, every community was full of hope, and soothsayers were numerous enough; but, so far as I can find out, the popular New England poet, John G. Saxe, writing in 1849, expressed about the total public interest there was in the railway problem in the infectious melody:

Bless me, bless me, ain't it pleasant riding on the rail?

We had a good many people who assumed the rôle of prophets. I find that William H. Seward, in the old Senate Chamber yonder, when the Pacific Railroad was under debate, turned out a prophet on a fine scale for uninspired times. The American desert was an uninhabited wilderness, yet he saw millions of people swarming into the cities of the great plains. He looked over the tops of the Rocky Mountains and saw flowing out of them the mysterious riches of gold and silver. His eye rested upon the huts clustered about the bay of San Francisco and they were transfigured before him till he caught a glimpse of the domes and spires of the city as she sits there in her queenly beauty. The question of an isthmian canal had hardly entered into the public mind at all, yet he saw that wonderful highway of international commerce opened to mankind, a thing that some of our own folks can not see even now. [Laughter.] He looked out toward the east and before his eyes the little kingdom of Japan, no longer wrapped in swaddling bands, rose up out of the ocean to take her place among the nations of the earth. He saw the ancient empire of China, mother of civilizations, turn her wrinkled and weary face toward the dawn. He saw the flag of the American Republic affectionately saluted in all of the islands of the Pacific and the enterprises of our commerce making their way up and down all the coasts of Asia.

That was his dream; and the trouble with the building of the whole American railway system was that the American people allowed it to be carried on in the atmosphere of just such visions of the wonders that should be. In our anxiety to get the railroads built we overlooked the economic advantages which even the most backward countries in Europe secured through a proper location of the lines. We forgot, or rather we did not know, that the survey of railroads is a problem of commerce as well as of engineering, and so we allowed, by mere inattention, villages and cities and townships and counties and States to join in an indiscriminate race after every promoter who could lay down on the table a bunch of blueprints as an evidence of his good faith. There was hardly a thought for the future and hardly a gleam of light on the rough pathway over which we were to travel; a pathway strewn with the wrecks of individuals and municipalities and State governments, and littered with speculations so bold and so fraudulent that they would be identified in the stock exchanges of our day as admirable illustrations of the evolution of modern business. Progressive citizens cheerfully covered their property with taxes; cities and towns followed the contagious example of counties and States in donating their revenues and encumbering their resources with bonded indebtedness to be tossed into the nearest right of way. And even the National Government, beginning in 1850 under the leadership of Stephen A. Douglas, opened the doors of the General Land Office and invited the adventurers of the whole earth to help themselves.

Thus did that day and generation interpret the dreams of its prophets and enthusiasts. There was one word spoken in England which, if we could have heard it, if some clear-headed man had had the time to repeat it often enough in our hearing, would have saved us from many misfortunes—"Where combination is possible competition is impossible." If I had been presented with a book thirty years ago containing that sentence and could have been made to understand it, I do not think I would have voted four times in twenty years to put a 5 per cent tax upon what little I had in the world in order to get another railroad into our town. But it seems that by common consent everybody forgot that a railroad, notwithstanding the complex competitive forces that always beat upon it, is essentially a monopoly, and the fact that there is more than one between two towns does not alter that situation for any length of time.

A railroad is a monopoly, because the ordinary motives of competition do not apply to it. In ordinary business if you have a competitor and want to get him out of the way you can hammer down prices, reduce his vitality, and finally get rid of him. But you can not handle a railroad in that way. The worse you reduce its vitality, the greater inroad you make upon the earnings; the more perilously you push it to the brink of the precipice, the more fatal its competition becomes; and when at last you get it entirely swamped in bankruptcy and the creditors gather around, you have only succeeded in producing the worst possible competition to which a solvent and self-respecting corporation can be exposed.

Therefore the law of competition has no direct application to the railway system; and so those wearisome pages have been written which were read here yesterday by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], which tell of rate wars and secret contracts and pooling agreements and rebates and midnight tariffs and mergers and the whole brood of commercial anarchy which has cursed the market place of the American people.

But I am not here for the purpose of framing an indictment against the American railway system; very far from that. There probably is not a man here—not even my honorable friend from Ohio—who gives to these masterful and farsighted men who have built the American railways any more credit than I do. I have a personal acquaintance with many of them, and I have made it a part of my business to study the achievments of all of them. I have in my heart no morbid sentiments of any sort on the subject, and I say now that we have underrated altogether the difficulties which have been encountered by the leaders who have come to the front in this continental play of the commercial forces which have drawn the railway map of the United States. They may have made stupendous errors, but all of their mistakes put together do not equal the monumental folly which has allowed the Government of the United States to go to sleep in the midst of these mighty struggles. Nearly all of our railway problems have their origin in this din of commercial strife. Here the swindles of speculation have been perpetuated; here also are the beginnings of that endless chain of injustice and discrimination grown at last so complicated as to entangle the whole community.

I am not one of those who have deplored the tendency toward cooperation of our railway systems; the consolidation of through routes under one management; arrangements for joint traffic over several lines, and even those inventions of legal ingenuity by which the ultimate direction of independent railway properties is brought under a common interest; none of these things appear to me to injuriously affect the national welfare if the Government of the United States can be waked up to the discharge of the duty which it has neglected for so many years. This legislation conceals no threat against the movement along proper lines, toward a more perfect union of transportation activities. The people of the United States know perfectly well what is going on; and the note of alarm which they have sounded is not against the integration of railway properties. They understand that the old-time railway manager in his shirt sleeves, swearing like a pirate as he cuts his schedules to the quick in his wrath against a competing line, has disappeared; that the fires of the conflict have died out, and that the combatants have moved to New York, with lighter duties and larger salaries, and they have lost interest in both of them. What they now ask is that the one power greater than all these combinations of capital—the Government of the United States—shall take the place which the Constitution assigns to it as the guardian of the market place. That is the resolution which they have formed and to its execution they have set themselves under the superb moral leadership of the President of the United States, without a trace of malice in their hearts against any legitimate property interest.

I know how poorly I am able to present this great cause. It needs neither sneers nor contemptuous utterances to make me understand that. I am in a position which I did not seek, but from which, upon my conscience as a citizen and upon my oath as a Senator, I will not run away. It might as well be understood once for all that the American people who are behind this movement are not to be turned aside from their purpose by the taunts and derisive accusations that they are a reckless mob of rate fixers. They are not fixing rates; they are fixing civilization. They are fixing the relation of a gigantic property interest to American society as a whole, and they have not begun too early.

I hold in my hand an extract which I cut out the other day from the New York Sun, and if it will not bother you I will ask you to listen to it, because unconsciously and without a trace of humor this Associated Press report uncovers the situation that exists in the United States to-day, and throws the light of a grim satire upon the present state of the institutions in defense of which so many sacrifices have been made in other generations:

ATTORNEYS ADVISE THAT TO CONTINUE FIGHTING THE GOVERNMENT MEANS DISASTER.

CHICAGO, December 21, 1905.

American railway interests are to cooperate with the Government in enforcement of laws against rebates. This was made known and confirmed in Chicago to-day, where was completed, three weeks ago, the protocol for peace between the Government and the railways.

By January 1, it is said, the first orders looking to putting the new policy into operation will go forth from New York.

This is the programme declared to have been adopted by the roads on advice of a majority of twenty of the best-known railroad attorneys for the country:

No renewals of contracts or secret rebate agreements with shippers.

No extension of private car line influence.

Concerted effort to curb industrial railroads, which, by demanding inequitable division of freights, have wrung rebates from the big roads for manufacturing concerns.

The reforms came on the advice of railway lawyers that to continue fighting the Government meant to invite disaster.

What strange story is this? I have heard it contended in the Senate that every treaty must come here, at least for our inspection. But here seems to be a treaty, with a full-sized protocol attached, by which high contracting parties get together and solemnly agree that one of them, after maintaining for nearly twenty years an independent status—an insurrectionary power, with belligerent rights—at length concedes the authority of as wise and just a statute as ever appeared in the law books of civilization. In China, I have heard it said, an immemorial usage prevents any citizen from building a house in the imperial capital more than one story high lest it should overlook the walls of the palace. The idea is not a bad one, and the time has come in the United States when no interest of property, however great, shall be allowed to overshadow the Government of the United States. The practical question which has arisen out of this controversy is not whether the law shall supervise the imposition of railway rates. Everybody agrees to that.

Even the most conspicuous of those who appeared before us representing the railways admitted that there ought to be effective supervision and control; and my honored colleague the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] comes forward with a proposition to commit every railroad rate in the country to the equity jurisdiction of the courts whenever, upon complaint, the Interstate Commerce Commission shall choose to make the United States the plaintiff in the proceedings. And one of the curious things about our situation is that the chorus of protest against rate fixing has been so busy with its musical programme that it does not appear to realize that rate fixing is rate fixing even if the courts of justice attend to it.

I need not say that I accord to the distinguished Senator from Ohio full credit for the integrity of his purpose in bringing forward this proposal. I do not now dispute the constitutional grounds upon which his proposition is founded. I used to take my constitutional law secondhand and, owing to my temperament, in very small lots. I have seldom indulged the disposition to furnish forth a constitutional feast of my own, but have preferred to imitate the wisdom of those housewives who, instead of cooking their dinners at home, have fallen in the way of sending for professional caterers to prepare the food and set the table; but I have made up my mind during the past summer that whenever I want to know if a thing is constitutional I will attend to the details myself.

I find upon a very careful inquiry into first principles, sufficiently supported by judicial authority and precedent, that the United States can be made a plaintiff in behalf of a complainant before the Interstate Commerce Commission for the prosecution of a suit in equity to restrain any violation of the interstate-commerce law; and in case the violation consists in the unreasonableness of a rate, it may be that the court has authority to find what the reasonable rate is in that case and to enjoin all in excess of that. At any rate I will leave to others to dispute the legal competency of the honorable Senator's proposal. I base my opposition to the bill called by his name upon the ground that in reality it involves a double investigation; one by the Commission, which must necessarily be thorough before the suit could properly be ordered, and then proceedings in the court, issuing at last in a decree, more or less unmanageable, for regulating the future conduct of the defendant.

But that is not my chief objection to the Senator's proposition. This is an old and clean-cut division of opinion between those who would secure the enforcement of these laws before the courts of justice and those who think it better to hand the matter over to an administrative tribunal charged with the duty of applying the law to particular cases.

These two theories of rate regulation have been fighting side by side in the English-speaking world for more than fifty years, and I beg the indulgence of the Senate while I refer more particularly to the conflict of these opinions in England and its influence upon legislation there. It is all the more important because it is a part of our political inheritance and of our genius of self-government that we are prone to walk in the light of experience. For that reason our own legislation has followed closely after the English pattern, and the opinions which found expression in this Chamber, as the debate of 1887 shows, were noticeably colored by the experience of the English people.

Our power over this subject, within constitutional prohibitions, is exactly the power of the English Parliament within its jurisdiction, as our highest court has more than once affirmed; and besides that, the grievances against railway management, which have been most numerous here, find a perfect counterpart in what has happened there. Furthermore, it was the amalgamation of railway interests in England antedating a similar movement here by nearly a generation that aroused public opinion throughout the Kingdom to the need of parliamentary protection of ancient rights.

The English people, it is true, appear to have escaped some of our troubles because they had an inhabited country, with cities and towns and seaports already located when they began to bui'd the highways of modern commerce; while our commercial fabric, at least in the newer parts of the country, was itself the literal creation of railway enterprise. Nevertheless one can not read the debates which accompanied the agitation in England for railway control without perceiving how identical their problem was with ours, and if we have fallen behind them in the task our delay is after all excusable when we recall the issues of life and death by which the Government of the United States was beset for so many years.

Our friends on the other side of the water had an advantage of nearly everybody except us in the possession of a body of unwritten law left over from other centuries; so that the legal position of common carriers was well defined without any act of legislation at all. The thing they have been striving to accomplish has been to get their laws executed; that is to say, applied to the practical conduct of affairs. There was no dispute as to what the railroads ought to do. What they debated and decided was how to get the thing done. Their law, like ours, has always been based upon two principles; first, justice, and after that, equal rights; and I confess I have had much of my discouragement over the unhappy state of things in our own country taken away by considering how poorly the British Government with all its power has been able to get those simple precepts followed by 20,000 miles of railway lines.

I have examined many of these English railway statutes, but I confine my comments only to those which go to the heart of this matter, calling attention first to the railway and canal traffic act of 1854. I intend to quote at length from the debate on this bill, because it may properly be described as the Foraker bill of 1854. I will add that the bill offered by the distinguished Senator from Ohio is the only proposition, except the measure which I am defending here, which I shall discuss at all; because I may say candidly that I do not regard the efforts to so frame this legislation as to mix the courts and the Commission up in an endless confusion of duties as worthy of any consideration. If the courts are to be called upon ultimately to decide these questions the Commission becomes a worthless impediment in the proceedings, and if the Commission is to be charged with these duties, the courts have no business in the affair except to protect constitutional rights.

The object of the English act of 1854, as stated by Lord Stanley in the House of Lords, was twofold. First, to define the duties and obligations of railway and canal companies; second, to establish a code by which these duties and obligations would be enforced. There were two methods suggested; first, the establishment of a separate and independent board of the executive government, and, second, the conferring upon the courts of law the duty of administering the statute. Lord Stanley, the mover of the bill, said:

> There was no doubt much weight in the argument that had been urged that there would be an objection to commit the necessary powers to a portion of the executive government who would be liable to the imputation of being influenced by political feelings, and though they should not be liable to such imputation such charges would be made and destroy their utility. The other course, therefore, was adopted, and it was proposed that party having to complain of any infraction of the statutes and obligations might apply for relief to any of the superior courts of law, who could proceed by way of injunction to have obstacles removed or cause facilities to be given that were required to be given. They conceived likewise that the decision of a superior court of law was more likely to be carried into effect than the decision of any board.

Lord Campbell, a justice of the court of common pleas, replied that—

> He looked upon the object of the bill as an excellent one, but he thought the machinery was not well adapted for carrying that object into effect. The act sought to turn the judges of the courts of law into railway directors. With regard to anything of a judicial character, he hoped the judges of the courts of common law would never shirk their duties; but looking at the duties entailed upon them by this bill, he certainly thought they lay beyond the province of the judges.

Earl Gray said:

> He felt that by this bill the Government were calling upon the courts of law to enforce obligations certainly substantial in their nature, but yet of so vague and undefined a character that it would be extremely difficult for such tribunals, whose proper functions were to expound the common and statute law, to discharge such new duties satisfactorily.

At a later sitting of the House, Lord Campbell, who had undoubtedly done considerable thinking in the meantime, returned to the debate, saying that—

> He deemed it his duty to enter his protest against this bill. He had been in hopes that upon further consideration the objections to the bill which presented themselves to his mind in the first instance would have been obviated when he came to consider it more maturely, but he was sorry to say that the opportunity for reflection had strengthened them instead of weakening them. Since he last addressed their lordships on this subject he had had an opportunity of consulting many of his learned brethren on the bench respecting it. His learned brethren and himself were willing to undertake any duties which the legislature might impose upon them; they would set an example of obedience to the law and of respect to the legislature, but having consulted the judges at a meeting they had had upon this subject they were unanimously of opinion that the duties which they were asked to undertake under the provisions of this bill were not judicial duties, and the great majority of them stated they were not properly competent to perform those duties.

Earl Fitzwilliam said that—

He entertained decided opinion that questions of this kind could never be satisfactorily settled except by a department of the Government specially provided for that purpose. * * * As railway matters were now conducted it was clearly necessary that we should have a board who would listen to the complaints of the public and have something like an autocratic power to remedy them. This bill certainly afforded no remedy for the existing evils, for the railway directors would snap their fingers at and entirely disregard it.

I have quoted these observations because the opinion of Lord Campbell seems to coincide with that expressed by one of the most famous and honored of our own circuit judges who has given much time and attention to the questions which we are debating, and I therefore desire to read a brief statement from a recent utterance on this subject by Judge Grosscup of the United States circuit court, placing his opinion by the side of that expressed by Lord Campbell in behalf of the whole bench of the court of common pleas in England.

The core of the evil is that, as things now stand, nothing is done. In my judgment, the reason of this is not so much the difficulty of the law as it is the difficulty of its administration. One of the reasons is the incompetency, the total incompetency of the circuit court to pass upon that question. What is the daily life of a circuit court judge? One day he is exploring the intricacies of a patent case, following it through all its meanderings to its incubation away back in some inventor's brain. Another day he is hearing a personal injury case, with his sympathies in rigid control lest they should outweigh his judgment. On another day he is hearing some customs case, determining whether the particular goods under consideration come within this or within some other classification of the law. Another day he is pursuing the meanderings of some chancery case. Every day brings up some new subject covering some wide area upon which he has to be specially educated for the day's judgment.

Now call him from this judgment seat to determine a question that turns, not upon the particular rate that is laid before him, but which must take in the whole horizon of the country's commerce—that is as perplexing, as confusing, as intricate as the wire fences that the Russians put around their fortifications in the Far East to keep out the Japanese. Call him to take out of its place with the judicial forceps one of this class of cases, as the watchmaker would take out a wheel or a peg from a watch. It is a thing he can't do without taking out the whole inside of the whole rate or transportation system. Call him to decide that question, and you will submit one of the greatest, the most perplexing, the most difficult questions to a man who has had no education, no vision of the subject upon which he is expected to rule. Thus I say that the circuit court is an incompetent court.

Notwithstanding the warnings of the learned Justice, Parliament did place the administration of the act which it passed upon the court of common pleas, and for nineteen years that statute remained upon the books practically a dead letter, and in 1873 the second uprising of English opinion on this subject brought Parliament to a new consideration of the problem. Mr. Chichester Fortescue, president of the board of trade, moved to bring in a bill to make better provision for carrying into effect the railway and canal traffic act of 1854. With your permission, I will read what he said:

The present bill did not differ from that act, but he hoped it would be an improvement upon the act, and that as a result of further inquiry and larger experience the act would be rendered more effective for the purpose of attaining the object which Parliament had in view—an improvement both in respect to the provisions of the act itself and of the machinery for carrying them out.

Experience since the passing of the act (of 1854) had very conclusively shown that a court of law was not an authority fitted for giving effect to an act so peculiar and special as the railway and canal traffic act.

But after all it turned out, as many had expected, that a court of law would be a cumbrous and unfitting body for putting such an act in force; that from the very fact of its being a court of law it deterred many from coming to it who would otherwise be most anxious to avail themselves of the powers and provisions of the act; and it was itself most reluctant to undertake the duties imposed upon it by Parliament. He was not surprised that at that time Parliament should have endeavored to make use of a court of law, for there was then a distinguished judge—Chief Justice Jervis, of the common pleas—who, differing from all his brethren, thought that his own court could undertake such a task. That was not the view of his brethren, and especially of one great and eminent judge, who protested at the time against the imposition of such duties upon any court of law. He meant Lord Campbell.

He then quoted the prediction of Lord Campbell, which I have already referred to, and added:

The prediction of Lord Campbell the committee of last year found to have been entirely fulfilled, and now, at the end of nineteen years, they thought it would be well to take the advice of that noble and learned lord and to remove this jurisdiction from the court of common pleas to some other tribunal. With that view the committee recommended that the administration of the railway and canal traffic act should be transferred to a new body, which might be called "the railway and canal commission," consisting of three gentlemen of high standing and character, one, at all events, to be an eminent lawyer, and one, if possible, a man practically conversant with the management of railway traffic.

At a later stage of the debate Mr. Fortescue stated that—

He believed that the great lawyer who predicted the failure of the court of common pleas as a tribunal in these cases had been perfectly right. That court was not well suited for the administration of the laws of railway and canal traffic, nor did he think the habits of the legal mind were best fitted to decide questions which were not questions of strict law, but of direction, of administration, and of special knowledge directed to a special subject. He did not think that the question should be submitted to a purely legal tribunal, although the presence of an eminent lawyer upon it would be of the greatest advantage. They were all aware of the difficulties and fears which surrounded the entrance into a court of law, and thus parties had been prevented from making use of rights which had been confirmed by the act of 1854. This tribunal would, he believed, be well adapted for the duties which it had to perform, and would decide the questions which came before it promptly, efficiently, and cheaply.

There was little disagreement in either House that the opinion that the administration of the law by the courts had been a failure. The Marquis of Ripon expressed the common belief when he said that—

The opinion which Lord Campbell expressed before the bill of 1854 passed had been fully verified since the bill became a law.

I have gone over this matter thus at length, because it was the experience of the English traders in trying to have their matters settled by the courts that led to the existing scheme of administrative control in England and became the determining influence which guided our own course in 1887, for while the debate was raging, year after year, in both Houses of Congress, there was no contention that an act of control was unnecessary. That was conceded then almost as completely as it is now. The contention was between the administration of the law by the courts as opposed to its execution through the administrative powers of a commission. So that my learned friend from Ohio had revamped a proposition which was rejected in the land where it originated after nineteen years of trial by the English people and set aside as worthless by the Senate of the United States when it took up for serious consideration the interstate-commerce question nearly twenty years ago. I know of nothing that has happened during that twenty years, at home or abroad, which warrants the distinguished Senator from Ohio lending the influence of his great name to the revival of this discarded and abandoned public policy.

I agree perfectly with Judge Grosscup that the American people are not seeking the entertainment of lawsuits, to fill courts with questions alien to the disposition and faculties of our judges. The American people seek to have certain grievances considered in a practical way by men capable of understanding them, and above all capable of approaching the subject unconcerned about anything except the merits of the controversy. So that in supporting the pending measure I am only seeking to follow where the common sense of a kindred community, having learned its lesson from experience, has marked out the path.

This bill proposes to submit the complaint of shippers, whether they involve questions of extortion or unjust discrimination, to a tribunal of men of approved integrity and capacity, whose business it shall be, after an impartial examination, to make an end of the dispute. They will be men removed from the clamor of the street, out of the reach of mere prejudice or unbecoming zeal, not authorized to meddle in the affairs of the railway, not authorized to balance against each other the competitive markets of the United States but required to give their attention to a complaint directed against a particular railroad that the rate charged is in violation of law.

Their power is to find out whether that is so, and if found so to make an order substituting a rate which in their judgment conforms to the statute, leaving the carrier, wherever constitutional rights are invaded by the order, to secure its vacation by the courts, which will exercise in the matter a jurisdiction which it does not lie with Congress to take away or in any way abridge. Here is the battle ground of the popular movement toward an effective railway control.

I would be the last man to put forward the legislative programme which has found favor either in England or the United States as the end of all wisdom on this subject. The act of Parliament of 1873 has had to be amended again and again; it is even now in a crude and unsatisfactory state. It bears the marks of haste and a rather blind response to the insurrection of the traders. The only good thing that can be said about it is that it puts the Government in control. Parliament itself has fixed the maximum rate, in most cases far above the level of actual existing rates.

But the power of the railroad to change its rates below the maximum has been entirely paralyzed by a provision requiring the consent of the Commission before a rate already in force can be increased. In that situation, as Mr. Acworth, in his excellent little book on railway economics, has pointed out, the rates are stationary throughout the United Kingdom, and no manager dares to put his rate down on account of the interminable difficulty of afterwards getting permission to put it back up.

Mr. Acworth was kind enough to give his views informally before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce during his recent visit to the United States; and according to this testimony the English statute works well except in the particular to which I have just alluded. The framers of this bill have taken care to avoid that error. The rates to be established under its authority are only reasonable limitations upon the railway charges, leaving entire elasticity in the rate schedules below that level, and I sincerely hope that no friend of rate legislation in this Congress will insist on compelling the Commission, by fixing a specific rate, to introduce into our legislation the glaring error which Mr. Acworth has pointed out in the English law.

I do not pretend, either, that the interstate-commerce act of 1887 has worked well in all particulars, though I can not honestly join in the clamor which asserts that the Supreme Court took away its power. At this moment it has in it energies that need only to be brought into activity to make it a weapon in the hands of the Commission barely less formidable than it was before the famous decision of the Supreme Court took away its life.

It has in it now all the powers which it is proposed to create in the bill of the honorable Senator from Ohio, except, possibly, the equity jurisdiction to establish a maximum reasonable rate in a suit conducted by the United States. It has in it now all the powers created in the bill prepared by the honorable Senator from West Virginia, except the power to arbitrarily fix a rate to take the place of one condemned by the courts.

Indeed, the measure prepared by the Senator from West Virginia, instead of increasing the power of the Commission, subtracts from it in a most reckless way. It requires the Commission to ascertain the merits of a complaint; to acquire the knowledge necessary to begin proceedings, and instead of sending the Commission into court, as the present law does, with a record of findings which in themselves constitute the prima facie case, leaving the railroad lawyers to walk the floor on the question of evidence, it puts that burden upon the Government and makes the proceeding from the standpoint of the public an absurd waste of time. So that if nothing better can be done than is likely to be accomplished by these learned efforts to strengthen the law it would be infinitely better to leave it exactly as it is.

If the blunder made in 1887 is to be repeated now, we might as well wind up our affairs and take our chances on the law as it is. In 1887 the House demanded the settlement of these questions in the courts; the Senate demanded their settlement by a commission. The outcome of a controversy lasting many years was a statute which said to the Commission, "Execute this law," and to the courts, "Let no act of the Commission escape."

The proposal which I am here to advocate makes an honest effort to retrace the steps into which that error has led. It says to the Commission, "Take this practical business question, this complaint of a shipper, apply to it all the knowledge you have and all the information you can get, and settle it in the lifetime of the parties interested." It says nothing to the courts, because it knows they stand ready, clothed with a jurisdiction which Congress can not take away, to protect the carrier against any error of the Commission which would operate as an oppression or an injustice. The Commission can make no order which is not fair and just to the carrier without having its act brought into judgment in the circuit court of the United States, under a jurisdiction in equity which is complete for the protection of property rights.

But the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] says that the measure proposed is unconstitutional. He expresses the opinion that Congress itself is without the power to fix a railroad rate, and proves it by quoting a decision of the Supreme Court, in which they waive the question because it was not before them. And as if to make his demonstration complete, he quotes the language of the Supreme Court in the Maximum Rate case, in which the court says, in deciding the question whether the power to fix rates had been conferred upon the Commission by the act of 1887:

> The present inquiry is limited to what Congress determined to be done with reference to the matter of rates. There were three obvious and dissimilar courses open for consideration. Congress might itself prescribe the rates, or it might commit to some subordinate tribunal this duty, or it might leave the company the right to fix rates, subject to regulations and restrictions.

The Senator says that that expression of the court is of no value in settling the constitutional power of Congress, because it was not necessary for the court to make that statement in deciding the case before it. But if it be true that Congress has no power over railway rates, it is no particular credit to the great lawyers who argued the Maximum Rate case that they did not have sense enough even to raise that question; and it is no particular compliment to the court that they put into their opinion a statement that a thing is obvious when, according to the Senator from Ohio, it is not only questionable, but almost ridiculous. So far as I am concerned, if it be true that Congress has no power to fix charges in interstate commerce, the sooner we can get from the Supreme Court a definition of our legislative jurisdiction the better it will be for all concerned.

But the Senator from Ohio, even if the court should find that Congress has the power to fix rates, retreats to the proposition that it is a power which must be exercised by Congress without the aid or intervention of any subordinate tribunal. He declares that it is unconstitutional to call in a commission to apply the law to particular cases because it is a delegation of legislative power. And he brushes away the decision of the court to which I have referred on the same general ground—that the court was wandering in its mind, and dropping unnecessary remarks about things being obvious which in reality were not so at all.

Now, the truth is that the Supreme Court, when they enunciated the proposition that Congress can fix interstate railway charges either by its own act or through a commission charged with whatever functions are necessary to perform the act required of them by the law, was walking on the highway of the great decisions that date back to the very foundation of our Government. What are the sources of these sovereign powers of the State and of the nation? Fortunately, they are well defined in our jurisprudence. They are nothing more nor less than the powers of government inherent in every sovereignty to the extent of its dominions, said Chief Justice Taney, in the License cases. The Chief Justice added:

> And whether a State passes a quarantine law or a law to punish offenses or to establish courts of justice or requiring certain instruments to be recorded or to regulate commerce within its own limits, in every case it exercises the same powers—that is to say, the power of sovereignty, the power to govern men and things. It is by virtue of this power that it legislates; and its authority to make such regulations of commerce is as absolute as its power to pass health laws, except in so far as it has been restricted by the Constitution of the United States. (5 How., 582.)

The late Chief Justice Waite probably never rendered a public service of such vast consequence to our institutions as in the famous Illinois case, which came to the Supreme Court on a writ to test the authority of the legislature to fix the charges in cases where a public service is involved. The learned Chief Justice defines the subjects of the power of the State in these words:

> Under these powers the Government regulates the conduct of its citizens one toward another, and the manner in which each shall use his own property, when such regulation becomes necessary for the public good. In their exercise it has been customary in England from time immemorial, and in this country from its first colonization, to regulate ferries, common carriers, hackmen, bakers, millers, wharfingers, innkeepers, etc., and in so doing to fix a maximum of charge to be made for services rendered, accommodations furnished, and articles sold. To this day statutes are to be found in many of the States upon some or all of these subjects, and we think it has never yet been successfully contended that such regulation came within any of the constitutional prohibitions against interference with private property. (Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S., 125.)

In this country these general powers of the Government, never absent where there is political sovereignty, vested originally in the States and still remains in them, except so far as they have been delegated by the Constitution to the United States.

> When the people of the United Colonies separated from Great Britain, they changed the form but not the substance of their government. They retained for the purpose of government all the powers of the British Parliament, and through their State constitutions or other forms of social compact undertook to give practical effect to such as they deemed necessary for the common good and the security of life and property. All the powers which they retained they committed to their respective States, unless in express terms or by implication reserved to themselves. Subsequently, when it was found necessary to establish a national government for national purposes, a part of the powers of the States and of the people of the States was granted to the United States and the people of the United States. This grant operated as a further limitation of the powers of the States, so that now the governments of the States possess all the powers of the Parliament of England, except such as have been delegated to the United States or reserved by the people. The reservations by the people are shown in the prohibitions of the constitutions. (Chief Justice Waite in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S., 124.)

Now in the exercise of these powers it is certainly true that the States have complete control over their internal commerce, and may fix the compensation to be charged and received for the transportation furnished by common carriers:

> In regard to the business of common carriers limited to points within a single State, that State has the legislative power to establish the rates of compensation for such carriage. (Justice Miller in Rwy. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S., 450.)
> It is now settled in this court that a State has power to limit the amount of charges by railroad companies for the transportation of persons and property within its own jurisdiction, unless restrained by some contract in the charter or unless what is done amounts to a regulation of interstate commerce. (Chief Justice Waite in Stone v. Trust Co., 116 U. S., 325.)
> There can be no doubt of the general power of a State to regulate the fares and freight which may be charged and received by railroad and other carriers and that the regulation can be carried on by means of a commission. (Justice Brewer in Reagan v. Trust Co., 154 U. S., 394.)

But it is obvious that this power in the hands of a State is worthless for practical purposes, unless it can be exercised through a general law by means of a commission charged with the duty of applying the law. Hence the Supreme Court has again and again justified the acts of legislatures confiding the duty of establishing rates:

The power which the legislature (of a State) has to establish rates of compensation can be exercised through a commission which it may authorize to act in the matter. (Justice Miller in Chicago, etc., Rwy. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S., 459.)

There can be no doubt of the general power of a State to regulate the fares and freight which may be charged and received by railroad or other carriers, and that this regulation can be carried on by means of a commission. Such a commission is merely an administrative board, created by the State for carrying into effect the will of the State as expressed by its legislature. No valid objection, therefore, can be made on account of the general features of this act, then, by which the State has created the railroad commission and intrusted it with the duty of prescribing rates of fares and freights as well as other regulations for the management of the railroads of the State. (Justice Brewer in Reagan v. Trust Co., 154 U. S., 395.)

That the State may fix the maximum charges for the transportation of freight by railroads which shall not be unreasonable, is not disputed in this case. It has been so decided by the United States Supreme Court, and the doctrine has been recognized by this court. (Citing B. C. R. and N. G. Co. v. Dey, 82 Iowa, 332; C. B. and Q. Rwy. Co. v. Iowa, 94 U. S., 155.)

It has been held in a number of cases that statutes which create boards of commissioners and authorize them to make schedules of rates for railroad companies are not invalid for the reason here urged. The doctrine of these cases is that the functions of such boards are administrative rather than legislative; that the authority conferred upon them relates merely to the execution of the law; that a grant of legislative power to do a certain thing carries with it the power to use all proper and necessary means to accomplish that end; and that, as the reasonableness of rates changes with circumstances, and legislatures can not be constantly in session, the requirement that the statute itself shall fix the charges might preclude the legislature from the use of the agencies necessary to peform the duty imposed upon it by the Constitution; in short, that the legislature may authorize others to do things which it might properly but can not conveniently or advantageously do itself. (C. B. and Q. Rwy. v. Jones, 149 Ill., 378.)

That the general assembly can not surrender any portion of the legislative authority with which it is vested or authorize its exercise by any other person or body is a proposition too clear for argument and is denied by no one.

* * * * * * *

But while this is so plain as to be admitted, we think it equally undeniable that the complete exercise of legislative power by the general assembly does not necessarily require the act to so apply its provisions to the subject-matter as to compel their employment without the intervening assent of other persons, or to prevent their taking effect only upon the performance of conditions expressed in the law.

The true distinction, therefore, is between the delegation of power to make the law, which necessarily involves a discretion as to what it shall be, and conferring an authority or discretion as to its execution, to be exercised under and in pursuance of the law. The first can not be done; to the latter no valid objection can be made. (Rwy. Co. v. Commissioners, 1 Ohio St., 77.)

The State which I have the honor in part to represent here has had since 1888 a law requiring the railroad commission to "make for each of the railroad corporations doing business in this State, as soon as practicable, a schedule of reasonable maximum rates of charges for the transportation of freight and cars on each of said railroads," and, so far as I know, no court has doubted its validity. The same thing is true in Georgia; while in the State of Massachusetts there is recorded in Volume II of the Revised Laws, page 1034, an enactment of the legislature authorizing the commission to fix the rates on the transportation of milk, under a penalty of $5 for each can which the railways refuse to haul at the rate fixed, without the slightest suggestion of a day in court for anybody. I have mentioned these three States, whose laws have never been invalidated by the decision of any court, because they have the old-fashioned kind of constitutions and the old-fashioned separation of executive, judicial, and legislative powers which seem so dear to the heart of the honorable Senator from Ohio.

But the Senator says in effect:

What is the use of talking about States when the powers of Congress are under discussion? Do not the States stand in a fundamentally different relation to this subject?

I do not think so, and I have allowed my opinions about it to be built up very slowly on the United States Supreme Court reports. I hold that so far as control over interstate commerce is concerned Congress possesses all the powers which existed in the States before the adoption of the Constitution and which have always existed in the Parliament of England.

Is there, then—

Says Mr. Justice Harlan in the Northern Securities case—any escape from the conclusion that, subject only to such restrictions—

Referring to the restrictions on the exercise of power which are found in the Constitution of the United States—the power of Congress over State and international commerce is as full and complete as is the power of any State over its domestic commerce? (193 U. S., 342.)

In the case of South Carolina v. Georgia, the court held that:

The power to "regulate commerce" conferred by the Constitution upon Congress, is that which previously existed in the States. As was said in Gilman v. Philadelphia (3 Wall., 724), "Commerce includes navigation. The power to regulate commerce comprehends the control for that purpose, and to the extent necessary, of all the navigable rivers of the United States which are accessible from a State other than those in which they lie. * * * For these purposes Congress possesses all the powers which existed in the States before the adoption of the national Constitution, and which have always existed in the Parliament of England." Such has uniformly been the construction given to that clause of the Constitution which confers upon Congress the power to regulate commerce. (93 U. S., 10.)

The Senator from Ohio seems to be doubtful whether Congress may legislate in respect to commerce between the States in the exercise of the same kind of powers which the State has over its internal commerce. That doubt does not appear to have been shared by Mr. Justice Jackson in deciding the case of Kentucky v. The Indiana Bridge Company, for that learned Justice spoke on the subject in that case as if he had no doubt about it:

Possessing such sovereign and exclusive power over the subject of commerce among the States, it is difficult to understand why Congress may not legislate in respect thereto to the same extent both as to rates and all other matters as the States may do in respect to purely local or internal commerce. (2 L. R. A., 327.)

You will pardon me if I refer again to the Northern Securities case and quote from the opinion of Mr. Justice Harlan:

By express words of the Constitution Congress has power to "regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes." In view of the numerous decisions of this court there ought not at this day to be any doubt as to the general scope of such power. In some circumstances regulation may properly take the form and have the effect of prohibition. (In re Rohrer, 140 U. S., 545; Lottery cases, 188 U. S., 321, and authorities there cited.) Again and again this court has reaffirmed the doctrine announced in the great judgment rendered by Chief Justice Marshall for the court in Gibbons v. Ogden (9 Wheat., 1, 196, 197), that the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the several States and with foreign nations is the power "to prescribe the rule by which commerce is to be governed;" that such power "is complete in itself, may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than are prescribed in the Constitution;" that "if, as has always been understood, the sovereignty of Congress, though limited to specified objects, is plenary as to these objects, the power over commerce with foreign nations and among the several States is vested in Congress as absolutely as it would be in a single government having in its constitution the same restrictions on the exercise of the power as are found in the Constitution of the United States;" that a sound construction of the Constitution allows to Congress a large discretion "with respect to the means by which the powers it confers are to be carried into execution which enable that body to perform the high duties assigned to it in the manner most beneficial to the people," and that if the end to be accomplished is within the scope of the Constitution "all means which are appropriate and which are plainly adapted to that end and which are not prohibited are constitutional."

Not all of the justices concurred in this opinion, but the great lawyer who wrote a dissenting opinion recognized fully the completeness and efficiency of the powers of Congress, as these words from the opinion of Mr. Justice White show:

At the outset the absolute correctness is admitted of the declaration of Mr. Chief Justice Marshall, in Gibbons v. Ogden, that the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations "is complete in itself and may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than are prescribed in the Constitution; and that if the end to be accomplished is within the scope of the Constitution, all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, and which are not prohibited are constitutional."

The plenary authority of Congress over interstate commerce, its right to regulate it to the fullest extent, to fix the rates to be charged for the movement of interstate commerce, to legislate concerning the ways and vehicles actually engaged in such traffic, and to exert any and every other power over such commerce which flows from the authority conferred by the Constitution is thus conceded.

In executing the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution it is evident that Congress ought to have a large latitude in the selection of means. If it be conceded that Congress has the power to fix railway charges throughout the United States where the traffic is interstate in character, the power would be altogether nugatory and superfluous, both from the nature of the task and from its magnitude, unless it is possible within the Constitution to leave details in the application of the law to subordinate administrative authorities. That, I take it, is what the Supreme Court meant in the case of the Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, in which they say that—

It is a settled principle of constitutional law that "the government which has a right to do an act, and has imposed on it the duty of performing that act, must, according to the dictates of reason, be allowed to select the means; and those who contend that it may not select any appropriate means, that any particular mode of effecting the object is excepted, take upon themselves the burden of establishing that exception." (4 Wheat., 316; 154 U. S., 473.)

And again:

Congress being empowered to regulate commerce among the several States and to pass all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution any of the powers specifically conferred, may make use of any appropriate means for the same. (Luxton v. Bridge Co., 153 U. S., 529.)

The honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] appeared to me to base his doubts about the power of Congress on a rather narrow conception of what was in the mind of the great statesmen who laid the foundations of our institutions. It is true that the locomotive and the steel rail did not enter into their deliberations. But it ought not for that reason to be thought that they did not possess that constructive imagination which enabled them to build for the centuries. I was impressed, of course, with the learned interpretation given to our fundamental law by so great a leader in the profession as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER]. Our fathers did not build these institutions with the modern railway in their minds; but they did build them with the whole future of human society clearly in their vision. And somehow or other, without disparaging the learning of my honorable friend, I prefer that magnificent conception of our Constitution expressed by Chief Justice Marshall in McCulloch v. Maryland, in these words:

Let this be done in the case under consideration. The subject is the execution of those great powers on which the welfare of a nation essentially depends. It must have been the intention of those who gave these powers to insure, so far as human prudence could insure, their beneficial execution. This could not be done by confiding the choice of means to such narrow limits as not to leave it in the power of Congress to adopt any which might be appropriate and which were conducive to the end. This provision is made in a Constitution intended to endure for ages to come, and consequently to be adapted to the various crises of human affairs. To have prescribed the means by which governments should in all future time execute its powers would have been to change entirely the character of the instrument and give it the properties of a legal code. It would have been an unwise attempt to provide by immutable rules for exigencies which, if foreseen at all, must have been seen dimly and which can be best provided for as they occur. To have declared that the best means shall not be used, but those only without which the power given would be nugatory, would have been to deprive the legislature of the capacity to avail itself of experience to exercise its reason and to accommodate its legislation to circumstances. (4 Wheat., 413.)

I conclude, therefore, that whatever a State may do within its jurisdiction in the regulation of commerce the nation may do within its jurisdiction, subject to no limitations except such as are found in the Constitution of the United States. So that, while the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], finding that the Supreme Court appears to consider these powers of Congress so plain as to dismiss them with the dogmatic statement, "It is obvious," looks upon that far-reaching conclusion as an oversight and an accidental utterance of a court not interested in that question, I prefer to find in them the solid rock upon which this proposed legislation can stand securely in the midst of the noise and storm of controversy.

The present inquiry is limited to the question as to what it (Congress) determined should be done with reference to the matter of rates. There were three obvious and dissimilar courses open for consideration. Congress might itself prescribe the rates; or it might commit to some subordinate tribunal this duty; or it might leave with the companies the right to fix rates, subject to regulations and restrictions, as well as to that rule which is as old as the existence of common carriers, to wit, that rates must be reasonable. (Interstate Commerce Commission v. Rwy. Co., 167 U. S., 479.)

I recognize the fact that in attempting to go into the labyrinth of the Constitution I have taken a good many chances of not being able to get back, but I would now take up other questions of law raised by the distinguished Senator from Ohio if it were not for the fact that I have associated with me on the committee one of the greatest lawyers and most profound students of these questions with whom I have ever had the honor to be associated—the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]—and I feel sure that out of the abundance of his legal experience, an experience unusually intimate with the very litigation in the Supreme Court in which many of these questions have been tested, he will be able to supply the necessary argument to effectually defend this measure from whatever quarter it may be assailed. With a few words, therefore, somewhat personal, I will conclude what I have to say.

It has been said that I have been misled into a socialistic agitation now general in the country. I do not think so. I will tell you one thing, however, that I do believe. I believe that the time is at hand when those who desire to defend the law of property had better consult together to bring back the old institutions of society to a situation where it can be defended. I am enlisted for that fight. I have not a trace of socialistic spirit in my thinking. I do not look forward to government ownership of anything—government ownership of railroads or farms or banks or any of the instrumentalities of commerce. I do not wish to see the Government doing the business of the American people and all the rest of us standing around in front of the gilded domes of our State capitols or our National Capitol waiting for our occasional dividend out of the gross product of nothing in particular. [Laughter.] I do not yield to the fascinations of that cheap philosophy of human life. I believe in the laws that have built society up on its present basis, and I will say to you gentlemen, especially those of you who are so concerned about the great interests of property in the United States, that a storm is gathering, and the time is approaching when the American people are going to make an inquiry into the methods by which men in a few years acquire hundreds of millions of dollars and rise to an influence that threatens to subordinate even the Government of the United States.

That inquiry will be made. When that time comes, I will be on hand to defend the law of property. Capital is the earnings and the savings of labor. I believe in that. Whoever charges me with trying to forward any scheme for government ownership of railroads, or any other socialistic experiment in the United States, misunderstands both my public record and my purpose as a humble worker in the ranks of our common citizenship.

I will say another thing. This same charge of socialism was made in England in the House of Commons when the Government undertook the same sort of management of railway properties that we contemplate here to-day. A man, whose name I can not recollect just now, a solid old Welshman, I think, got up in the House of Commons and said that instead of looking toward the government ownership of railroads, the people were taking the only possible step that could be taken to make the government ownership of railways impossible, at least for generations, in the United Kingdom. I say now and here that unless we can in some way agree upon an effective regulation of railway rates we are face to face in America with problems which may ultimately involve a serious harm to our institutions by the forced resort of the people to untried methods in our business organization. I do not want to see that day, but I think I see far enough into the movements of public opinion to understand that unless the people of the United States are given some adequate protection against the abuses of railway management, or the possibility of such abuses arising in the future, there will be a formidable movement very much before the end of this generation in favor, heart and soul, of the governmental assumption of these great instrumentalities of commerce and of business.

One thing more. I have been accused by some of carelessness and indifference to the political party to which I belong. I do not intend to spend very much time defending myself against that charge. I have always enjoyed the reputation at home and nearly everywhere else of being a little violent as a partisan and a little slow in perceiving even the most obvious merits and virtues of our brethren upon the other side. I reckon it may be that I have outgrown a good deal of that; at any rate, I do not notice it in myself as much as I used to; but I still have a pretty well-grounded and vigorous conviction that the best service the Democratic party can render the American people is to stand on guard and see that their affairs are well and truly administered by the other party. [Laughter.] So that I do not know any place, except possibly right here within a limited circle, where I might be suspected of indifference to the welfare of the Republican party.

But did you ever, Mr. President, meditate upon the fact that, at the bottom, our political principles are one? If that were not so, our system of Government would be difficult if not impossible. But the fact is that underlying all our little party differences—Santo Domingo, the Philippine tariff, statehood, the shipping bill, the tariff, coinage, and all that—underlying that, these institutions of ours stand on an everlasting foundation, and around that foundation all political parties gather and are at home.

Thomas Jefferson understood what the foundation of free institutions was, and left a motto for his political descendants that has done them more good and less harm than any other thing they have had to do with from that time to this. He said: "Equal rights to all; special privileges to none." That has been good Democracy ever since; and it has been good Republicanism; for Mr. Lincoln, in the midst of the great struggle for the national life, put it into a proverb of his own when he said, "To all an unfettered start and a fair chance in the race of life." That was good Republicanism, and it is good Democracy,

And in a later time—for the good Providence that is over our affairs never leaves us very long without a distinct individual guidance—in our day we have had the same kind of leadership. Nor do I have any doubt that future generations of Americans will treasure in grateful hearts the blunt and fearless platform of Theodore Roosevelt—"A square deal for every man; no less, no more." The doctrine is the same, and if it is not a true doctrine, our institutions have no foundation at all. I think the doctrine is forevermore true; and by the great traditions of the old Republican party I intend to defend it here and everywhere.

I desire to thank the Senate, Mr. President, for the kindness with which they have listened to me. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 5976, and that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for that purpose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside——

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection to the unfinished business being laid aside for the remainder of the day without losing its place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 5976) to provide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CLAPP. I now request that the reading of the bill may be continued for the consideration of committee amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill at section 14, on page 20. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 14, page 21, line 15, to strike out the word "and" and insert the word "or;" in line 18, to strike out the word "town" and insert "municipality;" and in line 20, to strike out the word "town" and insert "municipality;" so as to make the additional proviso read:

Provided further, That this section shall not apply to land reserved from allotment because of the right of any railroad or railway company therein in the nature of an easement for right of way, depot, station grounds, water stations, stock yards or other uses connected with the maintenance and operation of such company's railroad, title to which tracts may be acquired by the railroad or railway company, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, at a valuation to be determined by him; but if any such company shall fail to make payment within the time prescribed by the regulations or shall cease to use such land for the purpose for which it was reserved, title thereto shall thereupon vest in the owner of the legal subdivision of which the land so abandoned is a part, except lands within a municipality, the title to which, upon abandonment, shall vest in such municipality.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 20, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue patents to the Murrow Indian Orphans' Home, a corporation of Atoka, Ind. T., in all cases where tracts have been allotted under his direction for the purpose of allowing the allottees to donate the tract so allotted to said Murrow Indian Orphans' Home.

In all cases where enrolled citizens of either the Choctaw or Chickasaw tribe have taken their homestead and surplus allotment and have remaining over an unallotted right to less than $10 on the basis of the allotment value of said lands, such unallotted right may be conveyed by the owners thereof to the Murrow Indian Orphans' Home aforesaid; and whenever said conveyed rights shall amount in the aggregate to as much as 10 acres of average allottable land, land to represent the same shall be allotted to the said Murrow Indian Orphans' Home, and certificate and patent shall issue therefor to said Murrow Indian Orphans' Home.

And there is hereby authorized to be conveyed to said Murrow Indian Orphans' Home, in the manner hereinbefore prescribed for the conveyance of land, the following-described lands in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, to wit: Sections 18 and 19 in township 2 north, range 12 east; the south half of the northeast quarter, the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter, the south half of the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter, the south half of the southeast quarter, the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter, the south half of the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter, the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter, the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter, and the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 24, and the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter, the north half of the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter, the south half of the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter, the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter, and the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 23, and the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 26, and the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter, the south half of the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter, the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter, and the east half of the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 25, all in township 2 north, range 11 east, containing 1,790 acres, as shown by the Government survey, for the purpose of the said home.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 15, page 24, line 10, to insert, after the word "at," "not less than;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That in the event said lands are embraced within the geographical limits of a State or Territory of the United States such State or Territory or any county or municipality therein shall be allowed one year from date of establishment of such State or Territory within which to purchase any such lands and improvements within their respective limits at not less than the appraised value. Conveyances of lands disposed of under this section shall be executed, recorded, and delivered in like manner and with like effect as herein provided for other conveyances.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 16, page 24, line 22, after the word "tribes," to insert the following:

In the disposition of the unallotted lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations each Choctaw and Chickasaw freedman shall be entitled to a preference right, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, to purchase at the appraised value enough land to equal with that already allotted to him 40 acres in area. If any such purchaser fails to make payment within the time prescribed by said rules and regulations, then such tract or parcel of land shall revert to the said Indian tribes and be sold as other surplus lands thereof. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell, whenever in his judgment it may be desirable, any of the unallotted land in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, which is not principally valuable for mining, agricultural, or timber purposes, in tracts of not exceeding 640 acres to any one person, for a fair and reasonable price, not less than the present appraised value.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 18, page 26, line 11, after the words "United States," to strike out "for the use" and insert "in behalf;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to bring suit in the name of the United States, in behalf of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, or Seminole tribes, respectively, either before or after the dissolution of the tribal governments, for the collection of any moneys or recovery of any land claimed by any of said tribes, whether such claim shall arise prior to or after the dissolution of the tribal governments, and the United States courts in Indian Territory are hereby given jurisdiction to try and determine all such suits, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to pay from the funds of the tribe interested any costs and necessary expenses incurred in maintaining and prosecuting such suits.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary began the reading of section 19, page 27.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, as I understand, we are taking this subject up now and disposing of the committee amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have an amendment pending before the Senate, which I propose to interpose in place of section 19. Therefore, if it is agreeable to the chairman, that section might be passed over at the present time and then acted upon after a vote is had upon my amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. That course is agreeable to me. I simply want to call the attention of the Senate to certain amendments to that section when we reach them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The section will be passed over.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment was, in section 20, page 28, line 23, after the word "contracts," to insert:

Except leases and rental contracts for not exceeding one year for agricultural purposes for lands other than homesteads.

So as to read:

SEC. 20. That after the approval of this act all leases and rental contracts, except leases and rental contracts for not exceeding one year for agricultural purposes for lands other than homesteads, of full-blood allottees of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole tribes shall be in writing and subject to approval by the Secretary of the Interior and shall be absolutely void and of no effect without such approval.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, after line 6, to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That the filing with the United States Indian agent for Union Agency at Muskogee, Ind. T., of leases and other instruments in writing required by law to be filed with said agent, shall impart the same notice and have the same effect that the filing of instruments, either for record or to remain upon the files, with the clerks of the various recording districts of the Indian Territory has or hereafter may have; and that all leases entered into for a period of one year or more shall be recorded in conformity to the law applicable to recording instruments now in force in said Indian Territory.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I move to strike out all of the amendment commencing with the word "That," in line 6, down to and including the conjunction "and," in line 13.

Mr. CLAPP. And beginning the following word, "that," with a capital. That is agreeable to me.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 21, page 30, line 2, after the word "lands," to insert:

That heirs of deceased Mississippi Choctaws who died before making proof of removal to and settlement in the Choctaw country and within the period prescribed by law for making such proof may within sixty days from the passage of this act appear before the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes and make such proof as would be required if made by such deceased Mississippi Choctaws; and the decision of the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes shall be final therein, and no appeal therefrom shall be allowed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 25, section 22, after the word "Indians," to strike out the words "of minors;" so as to make the clause read:

All conveyances made under this provision by heirs who are full-blood Indians are to be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 23, page 31, line 4, after the word "devise," to insert "and bequeath;" and in line 7, after the word "valid," to insert "if such last will and testament disinherits the parent, wife, spouse, or children of such full-blood Indian;" and in line 9, after the word "before," to insert "and approved by;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 23. That every person of lawful age and sound mind may by last will and testament devise and bequeath all of his estate, real and personal, and all interest therein: Provided, That no will of a full-blood Indian devising real estate shall be valid if such last will and testament disinherits the parent, wife, spouse, or children of such full-blood Indian, unless acknowledged before and approved by a judge of the United States court for the Indian Territory, or a United States commissioner.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, to add as a new section, 24, the following:

SEC. 24. That in the Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Seminole nations public highways or roads two rods in width, being one rod on each side of the section line, shall be established on all section lines; and all allottees, purchasers, and others shall take title to such land subject to this provision, and if buildings or other improvements are damaged in consequence of the establishment of such public highways or roads, such damages accruing prior to the inauguration of a State government shall be determined under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and be paid for from the funds of said tribes, respectively.

All expenses incident to the establishment of public highways or roads in the Creek, Cherokee, Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Seminole nations, including clerical hire, per diem, salary, and expenses of viewers, appraisers, and others, shall be paid under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior from the funds of the tribe or nation in which such public highways or roads are established. Any person, firm, or corporation obstructing any public highway or road, and who shall fail, neglect, or refuse for a period of ten days after notice to remove or cause to be removed any and all obstructions from such public highway or road, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not exceeding $10 per day for each and every day in excess of said ten days which said obstruction is permitted to remain: Provided, however, That notice of the establishment of public highways or roads need not be given to allottees or others, except in cases where such public highways or roads are obstructed, and every person obstructing any such public highway or road, as aforesaid, shall also be liable in a civil action for all damages sustained by any person who has in any manner whatever been damaged by reason of such obstruction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 25. That any electric railway, light, or power company doing business within the limits of the Indian Territory, in compliance with the laws of the United States that are now or may be in force therein, be, and the same are hereby, invested and empowered with the right of locating, constructing, owning, operating, using, and maintaining canals, reservoirs, auxiliary steam works, and a dam or dams across any nonnavigable stream within the limits of said Indian Territory, for the purpose of obtaining a sufficient supply of water to manufacture and generate water, electric, or other power, light, and heat and to utilize and transmit and distribute such power, light, and heat to other places for its own use or other individuals or corporations, and the right of locating, constructing, owning, operating, equipping, using, and maintaining the necessary pole lines and conduits for the purpose of transmitting and distributing such power, light, and heat to other places within the limits of said Indian Territory.

That the right to locate, construct, own, operate, use, and maintain such dams, canals, reservoirs, auxiliary steam works, pole lines, and conduits in or through the Indian Territory, together with the right to acquire, by condemnation or otherwise, such land as it may deem necessary for the locating, constructing, owning, operating, using, and maintaining of such dams, canals, reservoirs, auxiliary steam works, pole lines, and conduits in or through any land held by any Indian tribe or nation, person, individual, corporation, or municipality in said Indian Territory, or in or through any lands in said Indian Territory which have been or may hereafter be allotted in severalty to any individual Indian or other person under any law or treaty, whether the same have or have not been conveyed to the allottee, with full power of alienation, is hereby granted to any company complying with the provisions of this act.

In case of the failure of any electric railway, light, or power company to make amicable settlement with any individual owner, occupant, allottee, tribe, nation, corporation, or municipality for any lands or improvements sought to be condemned or appropriated under this act all compensation and damages to be paid to the dissenting individual owner, occupant, allottee, tribe, nation, corporation, or municipality by reason of the appropriation and condemnation of said lands and improvements shall be determined as provided in sections 15 and 17 of an act of Congress entitled "An act to grant a right of way through Oklahoma Territory and the Indian Territory to the Enid and Anadarko Railway Company, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1902 (Public No. 26), and all such proceeding hereunder shall conform to said sections, except that sections 3 and 4 of said act shall have no application, and except that hereafter the plats required to be filed by said act shall be filed with the Secretary of the Interior and with the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, and where the words "principal chief or governor" of any tribe or nation occur in said act, for the purpose of this act there is inserted the words "Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes."

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I desire to submit an amendment to that amendment. I move to insert, after the word "tribes," in line 2, page 35, the following:

Provided, That all rights granted hereunder shall be subject to the control of the future Territory or State within which the Indian Territory may be situated.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, before leaving section 25, I would like to ask a question of the chairman of the committee. In line 12 of that section, page 33, I notice these words:

That the right to locate, construct, own, operate, use, and maintain such dams, canals, reservoirs, auxiliary steam works, pole lines, and conduits in or through the Indian Territory, together with the right to acquire, by condemnation or otherwise.

What is the significance intended by the words "or otherwise?"

Mr. CLAPP. That comes from the fact that the allottees there, or at least some of them, are at present laboring under restrictions as to alienation, and the object of putting in the words "or otherwise" was to save any question as to the right of an allottee to convey so much land as might be required in the exercise of these rights.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is to give the allottee the right to convey?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then I move to strike out the word "otherwise" and to substitute the words "agreement between the parties," as being a little more definite.

Mr. CLAPP. There is no objection to that amendment to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Page 33, line 16, it is proposed to strike out the word "otherwise" and insert "agreement between the parties," so that if amended it will read: "by condemnation or agreement between the parties."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add as a new section (26) the following:

SEC. 26. That chapter 12 of Wilson's Revised and Annotated Statutes of Oklahoma of 1903 is hereby extended to and put in force in the Indian Territory, so far as the same is not locally inapplicable and in conflict with the provisions of this act: Provided, That wherever in said chapter the words "Territory" or "this Territory" occur there shall be substituted therefor the words "the Indian Territory," and wherever the words "governor" or "governor of the Territory" occur there shall be substituted the words "judge of the district in which the city or town is located," and wherever the words "county clerk" occur there shall be substituted the words "clerk of the United States court:" And provided further, That section 8 of article 1 shall be amended and enacted so that the councilmen and members of the school board shall be residents of their respective wards and elected as other city officers.

In section 8 the figures "1897" occurring in the second line and the words and figures "of 1897" occurring in the third line are stricken out and made of no effect.

In section 6 the duties devolving upon the board of county commissioners shall be performed by the council and recorder of the incorporated town or city seeking to be made a city of the first class.

In section 29, in line 16, the words "one year," shall be stricken out and the words "ten years" inserted.

In section 38, the city treasurer shall perform all of the duties therein prescribed.

The street and other improvements contemplated herein shall apply to all towns having a population of over 2,000 people.

All civil jurisdiction heretofore conferred by law upon mayors of incorporated towns and cities is hereby conferred upon the police judges of cities of the first class organized under the provisions of this act, and all laws heretofore put in force governing procedure in such cases before mayors of incorporated cities and towns shall apply to cases before such police judges.

All ordinances and resolutions legally passed by the incorporated town or city raised to a city of the first class under the provisions of this law shall remain in full force and effect, except where the same are in conflict with this act or repealed by the city of the first class.

That the tangible property of railroad corporations (exclusive of rolling stock) located within the corporate limits of incorporated cities and towns in the Indian Territory shall be assessed and taxed in proportion to its value the same as other property is assessed and taxed in such incorporated cities and towns; and all such city or town councils are hereby empowered to pass such ordinances as may be necessary for the assessment, equalization, levy, and collection, annually, of a tax on all property except as herein stated within the corporate limits and for carrying the same into effect: Provided, That should any person or corporation feel aggrieved by any assessment of property in the Indian Territory, an appeal from such assessment may be taken by original petition to be filed in United States court in the district in which such city or town is located, and the question of the amount and legality of such assessment, and the validity of the ordinance under which such assessment is made may be determined by such court and the costs of such proceeding shall be taxed and apportioned between the parties as the court shall find to be just and equitable.

No sewage, drainage, dead animals, refuse, or polluting matter of such kind and amount as, either by itself or in connection with other matter, will corrupt or impair the quality of the water of any pond or stream used as a source of ice or water supply by a city, town, public institution, or water company for domestic use, or render it injurious to health, and no human excrement shall be discharged into such stream or pond or upon their banks if any filter basin so used is there situated, or into any feeders of such ponds or streams within 20 miles above the point where such supply is taken.

Whoever willfully and maliciously defiles or corrupts any spring or other source of water or reservoir, or destroys or injures any pipe, conductor of water, or other property pertaining to an aqueduct, or aids or abets in any such trespass, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year.

Whoever willfully deposits excrement or foul or decaying matter in water which is used for the purpose of domestic water supply, or upon the shore thereof within 5 rods of the water, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $250, or by imprisonment for not more than ninety days. But the provisions of this section shall not interfere with the sewage of a city, town, or public institution where proper septic tanks and filtering beds are provided, nor prevent the enriching of lands for agricultural purposes by the owner or occupant thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, to add as section 27 the following:

SEC. 27. That the lands belonging to the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, or Seminole tribes, upon the dissolution of said tribes, shall not become public lands nor property of the United States, but shall be held in trust by the United States for the use and benefit of the Indians respectively comprising each of said tribes, and their heirs as the same shall appear by the rolls as finally concluded as heretofore and hereinafter provided for: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall interfere with any allotments heretofore or hereafter made or to be made under the provisions of this or any other act of Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. At this time the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], who is absent, asked me to present an amendment to section 18, which I will send up, authorizing a set-off to suits brought. I recommend its adoption.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 18, page 26, line 25, after the word "disposition," insert:

Where suit is now pending, or may hereafter be filed, in any United States court in the Indian Territory, by or on behalf of any one or more of the Five Civilized Tribes, to recover moneys claimed to be due and owing to such tribe the party defendants to such suit shall have the right to set up and have adjudicated any claim it may have against such tribe, and the same may be pleaded by such party defendants as a counterclaim or set-off; and any amount that may be found due by any tribe or tribes shall be paid by the Treasurer of the United States out of any funds of such tribes upon the filing of the decree of the court with him.

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 37) extending the tribal existence and government of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate joint resolution 37. The amendments will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
March 1, 1906.

Resolved, That the joint resolution from the Senate (S. R. 37) entitled "Joint resolution extending the tribal existence and government of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory," do pass with the following amendments:

Line 3, after "and," insert "present tribal."

Line 3, strike out "government" and insert "governments."

Line 6, after "purposes," insert "under existing laws."

Line 6, strike out all after "until" down to and including "repealed," in line 9, and insert "all property of such tribes, or the proceeds thereof, shall be distributed among the individual members of said tribes."

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House and request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. CLAPP, Mr. MCCUMBER, and Mr. DUBOIS were appointed.

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 39, after line 4, to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 28. That the tribal relations and government of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole tribes or nations are hereby continued in full force and effect for all purposes until the 4th day of March, A. D. 1907; and all acts and parts of acts, so far as they conflict herewith, are hereby repealed.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senate committee offer as an amendment to that section on line 4, page 39, after the word "tribal," to insert "existence and tribal;" so as to read:

That the tribal existence and tribal relations and government, etc.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill what difference there is between this provision and the joint resolution?

Mr. CLAPP. There practically is very little except that this fixes a definite time, and the joint resolution, as it came from the House, leaves the time indefinite.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator this legal question then. If the joint resolution becomes a law before this statute, will not this statute repeal it?

Mr. CLAPP. Unquestionably.

Mr. CULBERSON. Then ought there not to be some arrangement made——

Mr. CLAPP. I think not. If this bill should become a law after the bill is perfected by the Senate carrying with it this provision, I think it would meet the same purpose as the joint resolution. The joint resolution was only suggested as a sort of makeshift in case we could not get the law passed by the 4th of March.

Mr. CULBERSON. But this provision names the 4th day of March next.

Mr. CLAPP. Nineteen hundred and seven.

Mr. CULBERSON. I thought it was 1906.

Mr. CLAPP. No; 1907.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 9, to insert a new section, the following:

SEC. 29. That with the consent and approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, and at a price to be fixed by him, Walter Wilson, a minor, and Beulah Smith, citizens of the Cherokee Nation, may sell to the Delaware tribe or band, residing in the Cherokee Nation, for annual religious festival and camping purposes, so much of the east half of the southwest quarter of section 18, township 28 north, range 13 east, as they have each selected in allotment, or which has been selected for them, or either of them, the sale of that part selected by the minor to be made by a duly appointed guardian, without court proceedings, and the deed in each instance, when approved by the Secretary of the Interior, shall convey full legal title; and the Secretary of the Interior shall make all needful rules and regulations for the government, protection, and preservation of the tract and the improvements thereon, but the maintenance of the tract for the purposes mentioned shall be without expense to the United States Government: Provided, That title thereto in perpetuity shall be taken in the name of the business committee of the Delaware tribe or band recognized by the Secretary of the Interior, but no transfer of said tract of land, or any part thereof, shall be valid without the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CLAPP. Day before yesterday the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] presented a communication from the men in charge of the school of Old Goodland asking for authority to set aside 640 acres pursuant to a memorial. I do not find the memorial, but I have instituted inquiries for it. I will send up the amendment to add it to section 29, and if the memorial does not arrive it can be stricken out in conference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 40, at the end of section 29, after the words "Secretary of the Interior," insert the following additional proviso:

And provided further, The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized in case after investigation he deems it for the best interest of the tribe to set aside 640 acres of Choctaw land for the benefit of Old Goodland Indian Orphan Industrial School, and to convey the same to said school in conjunction with the executive of the Choctaw tribe.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first amendment passed over was in section 2. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, line 16, strike out "in" and insert "as members of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment which was passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, line 17, after the word "Cherokee" insert the word "or," and after the word "Creek" strike out the comma and the words "or Seminole."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment passed over is section 13, on page 16. It has been read.

Mr. CLAPP. I think the motion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. CLARK] was pending to strike it out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Montana that the result he desires to accomplish by his motion will be accomplished by disagreeing to the committee amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee, which is to strike out section 13 from line 3 down to the word "leases," in line 13, on page 16, and insert certain other words. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. LONG. The effect of agreeing to the amendment of the committee will be to strike out section 13 as it came from the House and insert the provisions on pages 16, 17, and 18, down to line 19, on page 20. The effect of disagreeing, as I understand, to the amendment of the committee will restore the House provision.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas is correct in that interpretation.

Mr. LONG. Then I am in favor of disagreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Montana. I propose that the Senate shall disagree to the committee amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That question is before the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, with respect to section 13 I would like to say just a few words, if in order.

We are dealing with property here of very great value. The value of the coal mined from the leased portions of the coal lands last year was more than $5,000,000.

It does seem to me that the rights of the Indians and the limitations to be placed upon the transportation companies that have gone in and, in violation of law, acquired the leases in those lands ought not to be disposed of with the limited attendance that there is in the Senate this afternoon. I rise at this time only to protest against such important interests being disposed of without a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question of the presence of a quorum is raised. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the matter can be passed over until to-morrow I will not raise the question.

Mr. FRYE. It is too late now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Nothing is in order now except calling the roll.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. All right.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aldrich | Clark, Wyo. | Hansbrough | Nixon |
| Allee | Clay | Hemenway | Overman |
| Allison | Crane | Heyburn | Penrose |
| Ankeny | Culberson | Kean | Perkins |
| Bacon | Daniel | Kittredge | Pettus |
| Blackburn | Dick | La Follette | Piles |
| Bulkeley | Dillingham | Long | Scott |
| Burkett | Dryden | McCreary | Stone |
| Burnham | Dubois | McCumber | Taliaferro |
| Burrows | Flint | McEnery | Teller |
| Carter | Foster | Martin | Warner |
| Clapp | Gallinger | Millard | Warren |
| Clark, Mont. | Gamble | Morgan | Wetmore |

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Wisconsin will proceed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have amendments to offer to section 13 if in order at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments are in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In lines 14 and 15, on page 17, I move to strike out the words "and with immunity from damages occasioned by subsidence."

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I desire to object to that amendment, and I will be very brief. If any law is passed for the sale of this land, the chief value of course will be in the mines rather than in the surface. We sought to so draft this provision as to relieve the mines at the expense of the surface in the division of the value and in the sale of the mines independent of the surface. For that reason the words were put in. It is a matter I care nothing about.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, before that amendment is voted on I wish to say that I offered a like amendment as a member of the committee and reserved the right to offer the same amendment here. It was suggested at that time by those more familiar with the locality than myself that the mining was especially deep mining and that there could be but little subsidence of the surface in any event. It was also urged that by selling the surface and mineral rights separately and exempting the purchasers of the mineral rights from liability for damages by subsidence a higher price might thereby be obtained for the Indians. That seemed plausible, Mr. President, but I have since ascertained from the Geological Survey that much of this mining is surface mining or mining very near the surface. I have also learned that in many localities the surface value of these lands is from ten to fifty dollars per acre.

It would appear, Mr. President, that any additional value arising from this provision, when these lands are offered for sale for the benefit of the Indians, will surely be sacrificed by the license to mine without reference to the destruction of surface values. When it is considered that this mining may be conducted in some instances beneath even towns and cities, it seems an extraordinary proposition, without any warrant or justification, that the right should be given specifically to mining companies to conduct their operations regardless of the damages that may result to surface property from subsidence.

I urge this further reason: Improvements remote even from towns and cities have already been made upon the surface of these lands by hundreds of people, amounting, in the aggregate, to many thousands of dollars and involving rights not to be expressed in dollars. It is wrong under these circumstances to invade this country with a new principle in violation of common-law rights. Mark you, in the leases which have heretofore been made of these coal lands no such rights have been accorded the mining companies. This proposition is a new device for extending special privilege to the companies at the expense of individual rights.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to the amendment proposed by the committee. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the "noes" have it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KEAN. Can we not have the amendment stated, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 17, section 13, line 14, after the word "egress," it is proposed to strike out "and with immunity from damages occasioned by subsidence;" and on page 18, line 9, after the word "egress," to strike out "and with immunity from damages occasioned by subsidence."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to make my amendment broad enough to cover those words where they are found on both pages 17 and 18.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and called the name of Mr. ALDRICH.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, just a word before the vote is taken on the amendment to the committee amendment. I want to call attention to the fact that the law expressly provides where town sites are created before the lands are leased the right of immunity from damages from subsidence will not attach to such town sites.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Debate is not in order. The Secretary will proceed with the calling of the roll.

The Secretary called the name of Mr. ALGER.

Mr. ALGER. Mr. President, before being called upon to vote, may I inquire what the pending question is?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to the amendment of the committee. It will be again stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike from the bill where the words occur in the amendment of the committee to section 13 the words "and with immunity from damages occasioned by subsidence."

Mr. DANIEL. How will it read if thus amended?

The SECRETARY. So that if amended it will read:

Such land shall be sold on such terms as may be fixed by regulations as above provided for, but all such lands as are unleased at the date of the approval of this act shall be sold subject to the right of any purchasers of the mineral right to mine thereunder, together with the right of ingress and egress, and to the right of said mineral owner to acquire a sufficient amount of the surface, not exceeding 20 per cent of the said surface area, for the necessary surface works and operation of said mine, the value of said surface area for said mining purposes to be fixed by agreement between the parties in interest, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has also offered an amendment striking out the same words in lines 9 and 10, on page 18.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. McENERY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW]. As he is absent, I will withhold my vote.

Mr. PETTUS (when his name was called). I desire to inquire whether the junior Senator from Masachusetts [Mr. CRANE] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. PETTUS. I am paired with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], who is detained from the Chamber by illness. I do not know how that Senator would vote if present, and I therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLARK of Montana (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], and I do not know whether or not he has voted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. CLARK of Montana. Then I withdraw my vote.

Mr. MCLAURIN. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. MONEY] is unavoidably absent because of sickness.

The result was announced—yeas 8, nays 38, as follows:

YEAS—8.

So Mr. LA FOLETTE'S amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I voted "nay" on this amendment to the amendment of the committee for the purpose of moving a reconsideration of the vote by which it has been rejected, and I therefore enter the motion to reconsider now. I do not, of course, flatter myself that anything which I may say in reference to this matter at this time will change the opinion of the Senate, but I desire to emphatically call attention to the provisions of the bill as they will remain if the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin is rejected. In that event mining may go on notwithstanding the fact that it is carried on under private property improved and located on the surface of the ground, and notwithstanding it may go on under town sites and other communities of people. Mr. President, if injury results to private interests by virtue of the sinking or the subsidence of the ground, then it is understood under the pending bill that it is done with absolute immunity.

I understood the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], who has charge of this bill, to propose some character of explanation of this extraordinary provision—a provision which has the effect, and which will have the effect, of destroying private property in almost unlimited quantities, so far as the probabilities are concerned, and yet the wrongdoers will be given absolute immunity from the consequences of the infliction of such injury.

If the Senator from Minnesota, who was cut off properly by the Chair when he undertook to explain the measure with reference to town sites, has any reasonable explanation of it I should be glad to hear it now. As I have said, I voted "nay" on this amendment in order to make a motion to reconsider, so that the Senator from Minnesota might, if he saw proper and if he is able to do so, explain this extraordinary proposition to the satisfaction of the Senate.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, first I desire to correct the Senator and to remind him that I was not out of order when I made the explanation in regard to the town sites, because no response had then been made on the roll call.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Chair announced that the Senator from Minnesota was out of order, and I assumed that to be the fact.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood that the calling of the roll had been begun and that one Senator had answered. Afterwards the Senator arose, and the Chair learned that a response had not been made. Therefore the Senator from Minnesota was not technically out of order, as the Chair at first supposed.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, in regard to this amendment, I do not know that it is the duty of one Senator any more than of another to seek to advocate it. The amendment was adopted by the committee and, of course, having the bill in charge, it devolves upon me to present these matters to the Senate.

The plan which the committee finally evolved—tentatively, of course, because it is here as a proposed amendment—involved a plan of separating the surface from the mining rights and minerals. This was done upon the theory that, as a large portion of this land perhaps never would be valuable for mining and that if, as is frequently done in other portions of the country, the surface were sold subject to the mining rights, it would not interfere, very materially at least, with the settlement of that country any more than allowing the surface rights to pass with the mining rights. In reaching that conclusion, having only in mind securing the largest possible price for the Indians, it occurred to the committee that the value of the mines probably so far exceeded any possible value of the surface that it was advisable to free the purchase of the mines from all possible embarrassment as between the mines and the surface, giving value prospectively in the sale to the mine. It was thought that the sale of the mining rights would be facilitated by protecting the mining rights from liability for damage by subsidence; and if the Senator will read carefully this provision he will find that every purchase of the surface is taken subject to this reserved right. It can not accrue at present as to any surface right, but it is provided simply that when the surface right is sold the deed shall recite this reservation among the other mining reservations.

Then, to guard against towns finding themselves subject to this mining right, after they have been built up, without knowing that they might be undermined, the section relating to town sites provides that where the town is located before the land is leased, as to such land under the town this immunity shall not exist.

That is about all I care to say upon this subject. We want to so provide here as to get the most we can for those Indians, and the committee have worked on this plan. It seemed to them that the better plan was, while recognizing the somewhat nominal value of the surface, also to recognize the overwhelming proportionate value of the mine, and free the mine and the purchaser of the mine and mineral rights, as far as possible, from embarrassment.

It is a question upon which neither the committee nor its chairman has the slightest feeling. It was submitted to the Senate tentatively as an amendment, and if, with this statement, the Senate thinks it is wiser to thus take from the mining property, and perhaps to that extent enhance the surface as against the enhanced value of the mine, under a provision of this kind, it is a matter about which neither the committee nor the chairman have the slightest feeling.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. DANIEL. I merely want to ask the Senator a question. Like him, I have no personal feeling, of course, on this subject. It is not a matter to excite feeling. My only desire is to get the matter right. As I understand, the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] strikes out the words "with immunity from damages occasioned by subsidence?"

Mr. CLAPP. Yes, sir.

Mr. DANIEL. And I understand the Senator to say that that is provided for as to town sites?

Mr. CLAPP. Where the town site is sold before the land is leased, then, as to that town site, the immunity under this bill does not exist.

Mr. DANIEL. Very well, then.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course, after the land has been leased, then if a town, with knowledge of that reservation, is built on that land it is built subject to this provision.

Mr. DANIEL. Why should the miner be held unaccountable, having bought the rights under what becomes a town or a farm, if he so undermines it that it caves in? Why should he be exempt from damages if he is so negligent or improvident in mining?

Mr. CLAPP. It is not a question of what the miner should be exempt from; it is not a question of what the miner's rights or interests are——

Mr. DANIEL. But is it not——

Mr. CLAPP. It is a question as to which plan will bring the most money for the Indians when this whole property is sold.

Mr. DANIEL. How many acres would be exempt that would be subject to be undermined without responsibility on the part of the miner?

Mr. CLAPP. I can only answer that from conversations with men who are here especially urging the sale of the surface, and they seem to be very well satisfied with this provision.

Mr. DANIEL. In the rough, how much land would it be that would be underminable without responsibility on the part of the miner?

Mr. CLAPP. I can not answer that question. There are 470,000 acres, I think, segregated. I think that is the amount.

Mr. McCUMBER. Four hundred and fifty thousand.

Mr. CLAPP. Four hundred and fifty thousand acres segregated, and 750,000 acres are now held under leases. How much of the other three hundred and odd thousand acres is valuable for mining nobody knows, except so far as may appear from the Geological Survey reports.

Mr. DANIEL. But the mining rights under it are all reserved, to be sold separately?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. Then the whole body of land of this description that is to be sold would be underminable and sold subject to be undermined, without responsibility on the part of the miner?

Mr. CLAPP. Except town sites. We provide here for the creation of town sites first.

Mr. DANIEL. Then town sites are created first?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. But no matter how many towns may be hereafter built on this immense body of land, or how many people may live upon it, or how many farms may be created, all of it is subject to have the underpinning sold out and to be undermined, without responsibility on the part of anybody who does it. Would it increase the value of the mining rights, which only occur here and there, more than it would diminish the value of the whole of an immense tract of land if every foot of the ground of the whole Territory were subject to be undermined at any time by anybody who was looking for minerals anywhere about it without any responsibility whatever on his part? I do not know exactly how to balance the values in the case; but would it not be better to let it stand according to the general rule that a man must so use his own as not to hurt another? That is the common-law rule. You can not take a prop from under a man and let him down.

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly; they can not take it from under a man if the man owns it. This bill does not contemplate that situation.

Mr. DANIEL. If he buys it, before you sell the land——

Mr. CLAPP. Then he buys it subject to knowledge of the reservation.

Mr. DANIEL. But in this whole immense territory that is to be bought you may sell the mining rights first. A mine might not come within 10 miles of another; but a right to undermine all of it would exist and excite apprehension. Would it not be a certain cloud on the title to the place to know that at any time a miner might roam around and let it drop down?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. DANIEL. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish merely to ask the Senator from Virginia if it is not quite clear that whatever might be gained in the value of these lands by selling subject to the right to undermine, without damages for subsidence, would be lost and much more than lost in the diminished surface value? The whole surface is to be sold, and how much of it would be undermined would be a matter of speculation, of course. The whole surface would be subject to this risk and this danger, and the values would be much more depreciated, it seems to me, than the lands would be benefited by any such provision.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, this is a subject which I have not studied in the way that the Senators have who have this bill in charge; but it is a very extraordinary thing to attach to a conveyance of real estate a provision that anybody may mine under it who has a separate mining right, and destroy its value without any responsibility. It can not interfere with the ordinary industry of the miner to require that he shall have regard to not taking the bottom out of a man's property. It would only be here and there that a mine would be pursued or a vein followed. The common law provides for that. It requires that no man shall use his own so as to hurt another. It is rather extraordinary to change that ancient principle, which runs through all property everywhere, and it ought not to be done unless some very clear and distinct reason is given for it. Such an innovation upon general law ought not to be made unless it is affirmatively shown that the value to be affected on the surface is so very slight as hardly to be appreciable; and it should certainly not be done by an extraordinary provision of this description. It was upon those thoughts, that were evidently running also in the mind of the Senator from Texas, that I voted for this amendment. It seems to me to be a correct one.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the total area of the reserved land is 450,000 acres. It is fair to be presumed that that is practically all coal. There may be some places in it that are not coal, but it is in the coal belt. There has been mining on that land for twenty years. As to some portions of it, it was stated before the committee by a gentleman who is familiar with that country that during that time there had been no real subsidence at all, that the depth of the coal was such that the land had not sunk. There is a town of three or perhaps four thousand people on the land, and I understand that is on leased land. Of course everybody who took possession of the leased land took it subject to the lease, and I suppose no one will contend that the persons who leased it from the Government or from the Indians through the agency of the Department are responsible for any subsidence of the land. The same party who owns the coal owns the surface, and if a man leases coal land he takes the chances of the surface dropping down. At least, that is the rule, so far as I know, in leasing coal lands.

The value of this surface for farm land is probably not one-fifth of what the coal land is worth, and as there was very little danger, probably, of subsidence, and as the committee was exceedingly anxious if the land was to be sold that the best possible price should be obtained for the Indians, both for the surface and the coal lands, it was thought if we provided that the man who bought the surface and knew when he bought it he took the chances, if somebody mined under him and the surface sank, it should be his loss and not the loss of the miner.

It is not a case where a man buys a piece of Government land and nothing is said about the risk he is running. He takes that risk. That must be put in his deed or his lease, whatever the terms under which he may occupy it; he has notice.

The stricture seems to be very severe on the committee, as if this was an unheard-of thing. It is not.

Mr. DANIEL. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. How much of this surface area is coal land now?

Mr. TELLER. I stated a moment ago that there is reason to suppose it is practically all coal land.

Mr. DANIEL. There are many hundred thousand acres of coal land?

Mr. TELLER. There are 400,000 acres. One hundred and seven thousand acres are now leased as coal land. The whole area, of course, may not be coal land, but so far as the development has gone there it indicates that probably the whole is really coal land. It has not been bored or exploited, but it goes upon the theory that it is coal land. Now, if a man buys the surface and there is no coal land, of course, he takes no risk. If he is on top of a coal mine he does take the risk, but he buys it with that knowledge.

I do not think, from what I know of it and from what gentlemen who ought to know stated before the committee, that there is very much risk one way or the other. I do not know that it is very material which way the vote may go upon the amendment. I simply want to say that the committee, acting on the best possible information they could get, believed that the value was in the coal and not in the surface, and they desired in that way to bring the greatest possible price to the Indian by protecting the man who bought the mineral and letting the man who bought the surface take his chances of its dropping down.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, following out the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado, the principal danger of the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin would be that we would not receive nearly the full value of the land as a surface or mineral land combined if we adopt that amendment.

Let us make it clear. There seems to be a mistaken idea that we are dealing with naturally agricultural land. As a matter of fact, the Government has very carefully inspected every atom of this land by 40-acre lots, and has segregated it all as coal or mineral land. The coal crops out everywhere on the land, so that it is not now agricultural land. It is segregated wholly for mineral purposes. There are 450,000 acres of it. The value is estimated all the way from fifteen million to fifty million dollars. You can, therefore, see that the real value, the real thing, is in the mineral product of that land. A quarter section of the surface is worth $1,000, and that which is under that quarter section of land is worth $15,000. We provide for the sale of both the surface and the mineral lands. The moment you say to the bidder for the $15,000 worth of coal land, "You shall be responsible for all damages for subsidence by reason of your mining operations," you may knock off $5,000 of what would be his natural bid for that land; whereas on the sale of the surface you might not receive more than $1,000, so there would be a loss of four or five thousand dollars.

Now, bearing in mind that this land is not on the market for homesteads or for any other purpose, but is simply coal or mineral land, and that there is an agreement made with the Indians—for it belongs to the Indians—that we shall dispose of it so as to bring the greatest price for the Indians, not for the white settler who may settle upon the surface, our duty is to carry out our contract with the Indians and to sell it in such a way that it will bring the greatest possible price. If the mineral is the principal thing to be dealt with, then our contract necessarily should consider it as such, and should so protect the sale of the surface that it will not interfere with the sale of the mineral.

The committee was, as I remember, almost unanimous in favor of that proposition, and for that particular reason. So it seems to me, Mr. President, we would better subserve the interests of our ward if we sell this property in such a manner that it will bring the greatest price. No one is injured by this method, because every conveyance will contain the provision under which a sale is made.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE rose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to inquire of the Senator from North Dakota what provision is made in the bill for individuals outside of town sites who have made improvements upon leased coal lands?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not understand that there are any individuals who have made improvements upon leased coal lands.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If there are any, the bill, in its present condition, makes no provision for them.

Mr. McCUMBER. There could not be, because before any allotments or settlement was allowed upon the land, provision was made whereby this land was segregated.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. When was that provision made, if the Senator will kindly inform me? How long ago were these lands segregated?

Mr. McCUMBER. It was somewhere about five or six years ago. I do not remember exactly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator will permit me, I have here a list of individuals with the value of their property stated——

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, there is a whole city on a portion of the land.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; outside of the city—farmhouses, barns, orchards, and the like, improved property on the leased lands in one single coal district, the aggregate value of which is $65,800. The names of the individuals, the heads of families, who have improved these properties, are given here. Some of them I see have been on those lands for thirty years. If provision is made for those people, I will be glad to have the Senator call attention to it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I would like to ask the Senator when these people, as a rule, moved on the land, were they not simply squatters after the land was segregated?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have the list here giving the number of years of occupation, and it ranges from four or five years to twenty-five and thirty. It is given in each case, and the number of acres of the holding of each individual. If the matter is not to be disposed of to-night, I would be glad to have this list printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I wish to say that every one of those men went on that land in defiance of the rights of the Indians, and the question is now whether their rights are paramount to the property value of the land in the Indians. It is certainly a novel proposition.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to say another thing, Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator pardon me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I simply want to interrogate the chairman, if permitted under the rules, before he sits down. He says that these people who went on the land thirty years ago went on it in violation of law.

Mr. CLAPP. I did not put it that strong. I said in defiance of their rights.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understood the Senator to say that every individual went on in violation of law.

Mr. CLAPP. No; I did not use the words "in violation of law." I said every individual who went on went on in invasion of the rights of the Indians. The land was not subject to settlement thirty years ago, as I understand the law, and it has not yet become subject to settlement.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As I understand it, these people are Indians, members of tribes. I may be wrong, but——

Mr. CLAPP. Then their interest will be subserved in the value of the mines, provided this policy is a wise one as to value. If it is not, I have nothing more to say.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That may be possible, but they have rights there in their homes, it seems to me, and they may have some choice as to whether they shall be sold out and their homes taken from them for the benefit of some coal company.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I just want to say this for the benefit of the Senator from Wisconsin. He says these are Indians. An allotment has been provided for every one of the Indians of those tribes. They have their lands. If a man is a member of a tribe, he has his allotment, and his allotment is outside of those 450,000 acres; and he would not be entitled to both hold his allotment outside and also to hold those mineral lands which, with the consent of the tribe and upon a sacred agreement made with the tribe, were to be segregated and were segregated and held as mineral lands solely, not open to settlement by anyone, and under an agreement that they should be held in trust for the entire tribe.

So, if there is anyone upon that land who is an Indian or an Indian's son or daughter or wife, stepchild, child by adoption, or otherwise, each one has his 80 acres of land outside of that tribe. So I can not imagine any rights that could have attached to this mineral land that we would be required to regard.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. In reference to the suggestion just made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] regarding the names of private persons who have rights, or who are supposed to have acquired rights, there, I would ask the Senator if, in case the decision of the Senate should be against a reconsideration of the vote which was taken a while ago, there would be any objection to adding to line 15, page 17, after the word "subsidence," the words "unless private rights have in the meantime intervened." We could thereby guard any existing legal rights that may arise there or which may have attached there in favor of such persons as attention has been called to.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, unless the laws, the treaties, the contracts made between the United States and the Indian tribes are absolutely of no avail, there could not be upon that tract of land, as I understand it, anyone who could have any particular right. The rights of the Indians of their tribes have been to hold their allotments elsewhere. This land was surveyed and set aside by 40-acre lots, or tracts, as mineral lands, under an agreement made with the Indian tribes, and if others outside of the tribes settled upon those lands, they settled upon Indian territory simply as squatters, and could not thereby acquire any rights.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the senior Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Whose duty was it to protect these lands from invasion by the squatters?

Mr. McCUMBER. It was the duty of the Government, I suppose.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Government neglects that duty for thirty years and persons are allowed to construct dwellings and make homes under legislation of this kind, ought not their interests to be taken care of as against subsequent purchasers of mineral rights?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly not, in my belief. If a person goes upon an Indian reservation, although the Indians allow him to be there, although he does not disturb the Indians themselves, he obtains no particular right to the land on which he settles.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will yield and let the Senator from Minnesota discuss the question.

Mr. CLAPP. I can not imagine how any rights can exist there.

Mr. KNOX rose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, if that is true, then why should there be any objection to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CLAPP. I was just going to say I could not see, on the other hand, any objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Texas, because if any rights have passed, we can not take them away by this legislation.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have no objection to the amendment. I simply wanted to show that it was not necessary.

Mr. CULBERSON. If the Senator will permit me, if there is no objection to the amendment I have suggested I will withdraw the motion to reconsider.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I was going to suggest to the Senator that he change the wording of his amendment so that it should read something like this: "Unless private rights have heretofore attached."

Mr. SPOONER. Would that accomplish any purpose technically, if you leave it in that way? Have they rights? Will the court say they have rights? Why should they not be given rights, having settled there and lived there and expended money there, as against subsequent purchasers of mineral rights? This is a legislative enactment.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is precisely the effect of the amendment, as I think, though it might be made stronger.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator read the amendment?

Mr. CULBERSON. On page 17, line 15, after the word "subsidence," add "unless private rights have heretofore intervened."

Mr. CLAPP. I accept the amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. If a man has settled there without right, how would he be protected by that? He would get no title against the Government by lapse of time.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have not gone that far. I want simply now to protect those who have rights there. The question whether we shall affirmatively give them some rights in this bill is another question.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. CULBERSON. In one moment. The same amendment ought to go in on page 18, line 10, after the word "subsidence."

Mr. CLAPP. Exactly.

Mr. CULBERSON. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I want to make an inquiry of the Senator from Texas before he resumes his seat. Do you understand the amendment you are proposing will protect people who have gone on there and made improvements, some of them having been on there a quarter of a century? I am informed that they are Indians and members of these tribes, that they made their homes there, and invested their money, and subsequently coal was discovered and these lands were segregated. Then the Government comes along and says to them, "You have got to take an allotment in some other place. You have got to take 80 acres in some other place and abandon the homes you have lived on for twenty-five or thirty years." And no provision is made for paying them anything for the homes they have made there. They are to go out elsewhere and take 80 acres of raw land as their allotment.

Mr. CULBERSON. In answer to the Senator from Wisconsin I will say that my information is not such as to enable me to state as a matter of law whether these persons have any legal rights on these lands. Consequently this amendment does not go that far. The amendment seeks simply to reserve the rights which may exist there under the law.

The Senator from North Dakota insists that they have no legal rights. Other Senators insist that they have legal rights. As between these Senators my information is not sufficient to express an opinion; but the amendment will reserve whatever rights they have, and if the Senate desires to go further and create rights in these persons, if they are mere squatters, that presents another question.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I may be in error, but I am inclined to think that we have a law already on the statute books to the effect that whenever an Indian's allotment is made elsewhere than where he has had his home provision is made for the payment to him of the value of his buildings where he has been compelled to take his allotment somewhere else. I think that is already provided for by law and that the agreement, as I have stated, was with the Indians to set aside this land for coal purposes; and a further agreement that lands should be allotted, and, if I am not mistaken, that in the agreement heretofore made for allotments provision is made for the payment of any losses and for the appraisement of the value of improvements where the residence is changed from one place to another. If I am in error, those Senators who have been longer acquainted with the laws relating to that Territory can correct me.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, while I have not been able to put my hand on it, I believe that in 1902 provision was made for the payment for improvements on this land. I am informed by a gentleman who ought to know that the appraisement has been made. I understand they have not been paid, but that the appraisement has been made. I will try and find that act before we get through and see whether that is a fact or not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Texas to withdraw his motion to reconsider?

Mr. CULBERSON. Inasmuch as my amendment has been accepted, I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, in line 15, page 17, and in line 10, page 18, after the word "subsidence," to insert "unless private rights have heretofore intervened."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I propose an amendment to the committee amendment. I move to strike out the word "seven," on line 10, page 19, and insert "eleven;" so that these lands shall not be sold before March 4, 1911, instead of 1907.

Mr. President, I wish to say a few words in support of the amendment. The senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], speaking to some part of this section—I believe it was yesterday or the day before—remarked that he had information from the Secretary of the Interior that he believes the delay in the sale of this land and the disposition of it was instigated in the first instance, in his opinion, by some sinister influence.

Mr. SPOONER. No, Mr. President; I said I was informed that there were outside influences, sinister in the estimation of the Secretary, who desired delay, or something of that sort.

Mr. STONE. Yes; the Senator made that statement at the time. I did not rise to criticise the statement made by the Senator or by the Secretary, but I do want to say that I have information—loose outside information—that I apprehend is equally as reliable as that the Secretary of the Interior had and which was repeated to the Senator from Wisconsin, that there are interests very solicitous of having these lands sold and disposed of at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. So far as the chairman of the committee is concerned, I would have no objection to changing it to 1911, if the conferees retain the right in conference to make some provision for the leasing. When we strike out the House provision there is no more authority for leasing, and that would make a clear monopoly of the leases that are already out. If we carry this forward five years it seems to me we ought to guard against that condition by authorizing leasing in the meantime. I make that suggestion to the Senator.

Mr. STONE. Of course what we are doing now is perfecting the amendment before we vote upon agreeing to the provision. If the amendment is offered and its consideration is finally completed, and it is adopted, of course the House provision will be eliminated. If the amendment is disagreed to, then I am inclined to offer an amendment that no leases shall be made under the House provision earlier than five years.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator means if the amendment is so perfected as not to allow any sale for four years he would also prohibit during those five years any leasing? I simply ask the Senator, as I did not catch his statement, and not in any critical spirit.

Mr. STONE. I believe, Mr. President, in view of the fact that these lands are of such extraordinary value, and there will be such tremendous pressure from so many directions to have them disposed of and to obtain possession and ownership of them, no great harm can result by a little judicious postponement, leaving them as they are until some further development of the situation is made, so that the actual and true situation of affairs there may be better understood by the lawmaking power.

I hear stories going about the Capitol and outside the Capitol of combinations of great interests involving some persons even of such high standing—I do not know I ought to say so, but persons in official standing—that I believe it would be better to allow matters to drift as they are.

There are 107,000 acres of this tract of 450,000 acres already leased. A large amount of it is being mined and coal shipped to market for consumption. We are about to admit a State. That probably will be done during the next ten days or two weeks. The conditions there may be very different in four or five years, and they will be very different from what they are now. There will be a better understanding of the whole situation, and I think Congress can legislate more intelligently. It is very uncertain, as all agree, whether it would be wiser to sell these lands or to lease them. Personally I favored in the committee the policy of selling them.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I simply desire to call the attention of the Senator to the fact, as I understand the bill, that it does not require a sale to be made after the expiration of one year.

Mr. STONE. No; but it authorizes——

Mr. McCUMBER. But it simply places it in the discretion of the President and the Secretary, acting together, to make the sale of any part or portion of these lands if, in their judgment, it will be for the best interest of the Indians to sell any portion of them after the expiration of one year.

Mr. STONE. That is true.

Mr. McCUMBER. It does not compel the sale of the lands.

Mr. STONE. There is no compulsion about it.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will pardon another interruption, the prohibition against selling prior to March 4, 1907, was on purpose to suspend this matter, so that the next Congress could give it further consideration if it was thought best.

Mr. STONE. Congress will meet again in December, a short session. It will adjourn on the 4th of March. In two or three weeks after we meet in December we will adjourn for the holidays, and then we shall be met with all the appropriation bills.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not think I have any objection to the amendment.

Mr. STONE. It seems to me we will have very little time in the next session to consider the subject. The chairman of the committee says he has no objection to the change, and if no one else objects I suppose it will go in.

Mr. TELLER. I call attention to the provision for paying these Indians. I want to read it to the Senate. I have just found it. It will be found in the document entitled "Indian Affairs, Laws, and Treaties," first volume, page 784, it being the act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians, and for other purposes, approved July 1, 1902. After providing for segregation, it says:

> Such segregation and reservation shall conform to the subdivisions of the Government survey as nearly as may be, and the total segregation and reservation shall not exceed 500,000 acres. No lands so reserved shall be allotted to any member or freedman, and the improvements of any member or freedman existing upon any of the lands so segregated and reserved at the time of their segregation and reservation shall be appraised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and shall be paid for out of any common funds of the two tribes in the Treasury of the United States, upon the order of the Secretary of the Interior.

I am informed that that appraisement has been made, but there has been no payment made under it. That seems to dispose of these suffering people who are on these coal lands.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator what effect would the measure that is pending here now have upon that law which he has read?

Mr. TELLER. Not the slightest in the world.

Mr. CULBERSON. Does not that law provide payment for the houses and improvements——

Mr. TELLER. It does.

Mr. CULBERSON. By reason of the fact that they may be injured?

Mr. TELLER. No; the act provides simply for those who are now on the reservation. It provides nothing else. They are to be paid for their improvements. I am told that that has been adjudicated as far as to determine what they are entitled to, but the payment has not been actually made. This proposed law will in no wise interfere with that.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the Senator if the proposed payment provided by the law read by him is to reimburse them for any damage to their property?

Mr. TELLER. It is not.

Mr. CULBERSON. And the measure that we are now considering comes along and says that there shall be damage without payment. It seems to me that the two are somewhat conflicting, and the last one might be held to repeal the other.

Mr. TELLER. This has nothing whatever to do with it; absolutely nothing. It is to pay for improvements and improvements only. These people have no legal right there. I think that with the provision the Senator has got in they will be pretty well taken care of—with this provision in the two bills.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will have to object to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri in amending this bill so that no sale or lease can be made until a period of five years. I can see that a law of that kind would greatly enhance the value of the present leases, because there would be no further competition. You could not lease any further lands, and they would have a monopoly, to a certain extent, of the coal business there.

Mr. STONE. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. The amendment I offered refers only to the sales of land. It does not refer to leases. I propose to strike out the word "seven" and insert the word "eleven." That refers to sales only.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understood that it covered both, but even if it covers only one it seems to me it is safe to leave the matter in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, together with the President of the United States, to determine whether any portion should be sold. The understanding with the Indians was that it might be sold, but it should be used for their benefit. That is the present understanding. Now, it seems to me that we should leave it somewhere and have somebody to investigate and determine the matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I desire to offer an amendment to the committee amendment on page 17, which, I think, was inadvertently passed over in committee. After the word "States," in line 5, I move to insert "but not before March 4, 1907."

Mr. CLAPP. That is right. The amendment is accepted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 17, line 5, after the words "United States," insert:

> But not before March 4, 1907.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. I offer an amendment, and before having the amendment read, I desire to say that it is one that is very important to the Indians themselves, in my opinion.

The amendment presents the question whether we will now allow the Indian to dispose of his property whereby in a very few years he will have nothing left, or whether the Government shall so hold that property in trust by proper restrictions that the Indian tribes may be preserved a short time longer. On it I shall ask for a vote of the Senate, and that Senators may know what the amendment is I suggest the want of a quorum at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, is a motion to adjourn in order at this time?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The Senate refused to adjourn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The roll of the Senate will be called, the question of a quorum having been raised.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Allee | Crane | Heyburn | Penrose |
| Allison | Culberson | Kean | Perkins |
| Ankeny | Daniel | Kittredge | Pettus |
| Bacon | Dick | Knox | Piles |
| Bulkeley | Dolliver | La Follette | Spooner |
| Burkett | Dubois | Long | Stone |
| Burnham | Frye | McCumber | Taliaferro |
| Burrows | Fulton | McLaurin | Teller |
| Carter | Gallinger | Martin | Warner |
| Clapp | Gamble | Morgan | Warren |
| Clark, Mont. | Hansbrough | Nelson | Wetmore |
| Clark, Wyo. | Hemenway | Newlands | |

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. McLAURIN. I will again state that my colleague [Mr. MONEY] is unavoidably absent because of sickness. In addition, I will say what I neglected to say a while ago, that he has a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask for the reading of the amendment I have offered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that the Senate has not yet disposed of the committee's amendment in respect to section 13, and as the Senator's proposed amendment is not directed to that portion of the bill the Chair would suggest that it be withheld until that is disposed of.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Before leaving section 13, I think the amendment which I offered is in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, line 15, it is proposed to amend the committee's amendment after the word "same." The committee amendment to the word "same" is as follows:

After said appraisals as aforesaid, but not prior to March 4, 1907, the Secretary of the Interior, subject to the approval of the President, may sell the whole or any part of the coal and asphalt in and under said segregated lands, for the best price obtainable.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is at that point I desire to offer an amendment, and I now offer it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary is going to read the amendment in connection with the text.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Secretary has not the amendment that I desire to offer. It is another amendment. After the word "lands" I move to insert the words "in tracts of not to exceed 3,000 acres to any one purchaser."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin proposes the following amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, line 13, after the word "lands," insert: "in tracts not to exceed 3,000 acres to any one purchaser."

Mr. CLAPP. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I suppose the purpose of the amendment is to keep the control of these tracts in limited ownership?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes, sir. I was going to say a word.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is a very proper purpose.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wanted to say just this, Mr. President: On page 17, in line 16 of the page, in selling the surface of these lands it is provided that they shall be sold in tracts of not to exceed 160 acres to each purchaser; and it occurred to me that it might be in the interest of the Indians, and in the interest of the people who shall reside in that Territory hereafter, to put some limitation upon the amount of mineral lands that may be purchased. I suggest in the amendment the limitation to 3,000 acres for this reason: From the United States Geological Survey, and especially from the geologist who made the survey of these lands, and who is very familiar with the operations of the coal companies now mining coal in that locality, I am informed that 3,000 acres is the limit, or substantially the limit, that a coal company can mine out in a period of twenty-five to thirty years. It is manifest that the limitation suggested by the amendment is wise as a public policy from every point of view, and it will increase the amount of money received by the Indian at the time these sales are made. Then, in connection with the amendment which I offered in line 15, it will operate, I think, to prevent consolidation and monopoly of ownship in these coal lands.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I think the objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to the amendment of the committee lies in the fact that we perhaps should consider the value of the lands to the Indians. The suggestions which the Senator makes are proper in the line of public policy. If these were lands of the United States which we were disposing of, I think it would be proper to put the amendment in the bill; but mindful that this is the land of the Indians, mindful that it is our duty to put it in such shape that the President or the Secretary of the Interior can dispose of it for the Indians for the best sum possible, mindful of the fact that the Secretary and the President may make regulations as to the quantity of the tracts in which it shall be sold, and mindful of the fact that it will undoubtedly be their duty in the particular suggested by the Senator, I think it would be a great mistake and would possibly depreciate the value of these lands in the public market by putting a Congressional limitation on the amount to be sold in one tract.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I now offer an amendment to the amendment of the committee, which has heretofore been stated at the desk, to come in on line 15, on page 19, after the word "same."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment on page 19, after the word "same," in line 15, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That no railroad company shall acquire any right, title, or interest in said coal and asphalt lands by purchase at said sale: And provided further, That the deeds of conveyance executed pursuant to such sale shall contain the specific provision that no railroad corporation or other common carrier, and no officer or stockholder in any railroad corporation or other common carrier engaged in transporting coal from said lands, shall ever acquire any interest by purchase or lease in any of said coal and asphalt lands whatsoever: And provided further, That said deeds of conveyance executed pursuant to said sale shall contain a specific provision that no person, firm, or corporation, and no association or combination of persons, firms, or corporations, shall ever acquire any interest by purchase, lease, trust, agreement, or otherwise, in and to any portion of said coal and asphalt lands whatsoever in excess of 3,000 acres: And provided further, That upon violation of any of said conditions all right, title, and interest in and to said lands shall revert to and vest in the United States in trust for the tribes of Indians now owning the same, and the tribal organization is hereby continued, in so far as may be necessary to execute the condition hereby created.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the extent of the coal lands belonging to these two tribes of Indians is 437,734 acres. Of these lands 104,910 acres have been leased. The royalties formerly received by the Indians were 10 cents per ton. Those royalties have been reduced to 8 cents per ton. At 8 cents per ton the royalty value of these lands to the Indians amounts to from $200 to $600 per acre. Joseph Taft, the geologist who made this survey and who is well informed as to these lands, says that $400 per acre is the minimum price, or at least a fair royalty value, to place upon the mineral rights of the entire body of lands. So we are disposing of coal lands here the royalties of which, at 8 cents per ton, according to the judgment of the geologist best acquainted with the value, are something like $175,000,000.

From the report made of the coal production I find that 14,813,000 tons were mined in the last six years, the royalty value of which was $1,235,000, in round numbers. The total value of the whole output of the Choctaw and Chickasaw coal lands for 1905 was $5,398,389.

I submit these figures, Mr. President, for the purpose of impressing upon the Senate the immense value of the lands which are sought to be disposed of by section 13 of this bill. There are 104,910 acres of these lands leased up to the present time. One hundred and thirteen leases cover this aggregate acreage.

In the first place, it should be remembered that when, in 1888, the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company secured a right of way through the Territory, the act provided, among other things, that the company:

Shall accept this right of way upon the express condition that it will neither aid, advise, nor assist in any effort looking toward the changing or extinguishing the present tenure of the Indians in their land, and will not attempt to secure from the Indian nation any further grant of land or its occupancy than is heretofore provided: Provided, That any violation of the condition mentioned in this section shall operate as a forfeiture of all the rights and privileges of said railroad company under this act.

In two years, notwithstanding their pledge that they would keep their hands off these Indian lands, they came back here in October, 1890, asking the ratification by Congress of eleven leases which they had made of coal lands belonging to these Indians. On the 1st day of October, 1890, Congress approved the leases. Since that time additional leases have been executed by the Secretary of the Interior until, as before stated, there are now 113 in all. These leases are now owned or controlled as follows:

The Choctaw, Oklahoma and Gulf Railroad Company, either in its own name or through its officials and stockholders, have acquired 30 leases, aggregating 28,800 acres; the Atoka Coal and Mining Company, controlled and comprising officials of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company, have 8 leases, aggregating 7,300 acres; the Osage Coal and Mining Company (also Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway officials) have 7 leases, aggregating 6,680 acres; and a coal company of Fort Smith and Western Railway officials have 6,680 acres, covered by 7 leases. In other words, out of a total of 113 leases made, the railroad companies, directly or indirectly, have secured control of 52 of the leases, aggregating 49,460 acres.

I am informed by the Geological Department and by letters, which I shall ask to have read, that the effect of this is practically to place the coal development in the control of these railroads, either directly or indirectly, and the consumers of coal in that section of the country completely at their mercy.

I have no doubt the argument will be made, as it has been made to other provisions here in this section particularly, that it is the duty of the Government to get the largest possible amount out of these lands for the Indians upon their sale. While this is true, it should be kept in view that the Government also owes a duty to those Indians who are to reside in that country after these coal lands shall have been sold.

But with reference to the amount that may be realized upon the sale, it seems quite apparent, Mr. President, that if these railway companies may themselves buy, or may buy through others whom they control, the capitalists of the country will not enter into competition with them in bidding for these lands.

While this bill was pending in the committee there was some newspaper mention of these coal lands and of their prospective sale in the near future. At that time, as I have been informed, there were coal operators, or capitalists who invest in coal lands—an association of them—in session here in this city. I have since received a letter from one of them saying that if they had the opportunity to bid for those coal lands with the prospect of getting an equal and fair opportunity in shipping their product, they would go in and bid, but if the railroad companies are to be allowed to control both production and transportation in the Indian Territory, as they are doing in West Virginia, Pennsylvania, and elsewhere, capital will not go there to seek investment.

It is but a few days since that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] had read in this Chamber a letter from the present governor of West Virginia; and, in anticipation of the suggestion which may be made and which I have heard made by Senators near me while the amendment was being read, that it is all right to exclude the railroad companies from purchase here, but that it is going too far to exclude those who are officials and stockholders of the railroad companies, I call attention to the fact stated by the governor of West Virginia as to the conditions prevailing in that State. In a letter which was read from the Secretary's desk, received from the governor, he says:

It makes little difference as to the effect upon our people whether the corporation itself is directly interested in the production of coal in competition with other producers of coal or whether officers or directors or controlling stockholders are so interested. The result is the same. I have heard of cases where this company has attempted to say who shall ship coal and who shall not, and when they should ship it, and where they should ship it and where they should not.

I believe that the time has come, Mr. President, for this Government to declare a policy with respect to the ownership of coal lands by transportation companies; or to state the proposition more broadly, with respect to any transportation company going into competition with the producers who must ship over their lines. You can not conceive of a highway being open and free to all shippers alike when those who are operating the highway are interested in reducing the profits or diminishing the holdings of competitors who ship over their lines of road. As an exemplification of what is already taking place down in that Territory, I send to the Secretary's desk and ask to have read a letter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read, as requested by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The Secretary read as follows:

ARDMORE, IND. T., February 23, 1906.

Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,

DEAR SIR: Having noticed in a newspaper that you have taken an interest in the disposition of coal lands in the Choctaw Nation, Indian Territory, and that inquiries are being made as to whether the railway companies in Indian Territory own and control the output of the mines, I inclose you a clipping, together with a part of a letter head, for your information. There is no question about the Rock Island Railway, known as the "Choctaw branch" of said railway, controlling many mines near South McAlester, and that the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company and Missouri Pacific control many mines near Coalgate, in the Choctaw Nation. These mines belong to the railway companies, or to the officers of such companies, as you will understand by this letter head. Mr. A. A. Allen, general manager of the Southwestern Development Company, is also the general manager of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway.

I am interested in a coal mine situated between Atoka and Lehigh, in the Choctaw Nation, and, with other independent mine owners, have to suffer because the railway companies control other mines. If we make a shipment of coal, the coal company immediately knows from the agent of the railway company who the purchaser is, and shortly we find the customer a customer of theirs. We feel the effect also in securing transportation, and while our mine is nearer to the main line of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway, train load after train load of empty cars are hauled by our mine to their own, and we are compelled to take such cars as they do not need.

Again the freight rates are kept so high that the production of the mines is limited to consumers who are forced to use it because no other fuel is accessible. The fact is, the monopoly in the coal business in the Indian Territory is already oppressive, not only to the consumers, but to the independent operators, so that they can hardly afford to operate their mines at all. While I speak for no one but myself, I think the investigation contemplated in this clipping would result in great good to the people, to the operators, and to the Indian, and I commend you for the interest you are taking in this matter.

Very respectfully,

W. B. JOHNSON.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In view of the lateness of the hour and of the importance of the matter, as I conceive, I will ask that the bill may go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. KEAN. If it is agreeable to the Senator in charge of the bill, I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WARNER. The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, in charge of the bill, has just arrived in the Chamber.

Mr. KEAN. I will withhold the motion for the present.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, right in this connection, while the bill is under consideration, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That a select committee consisting of five Senators be appointed to fully investigate all matters connected with the condition of affairs in the Indian Territory in relation to legislation proposed by H. R. 5976 and kindred matters in said Territory with reference to the Five Civilized Tribes, and that said committee be authorized to employ all necessary clerical assistance, and said committee is authorized to sit in the city of Washington and in the Indian Territory, as circumstances may demand, with power to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths, and shall make full and complete report, together with their conclusions and recommendations, to the Senate of the United States on the first Monday in December, A. D. 1906. The necessary expenses of said committee shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the rule, the resolution must be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the joint resolution (S. R. 37) extending the tribal existence and government of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory; agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. STEPHENS of Texas managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

S. 4482. An act to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Carthage, Tenn.;

H. R. 297. An act to authorize the construction of dams and power stations on the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals, Alabama; and

H. R. 13308. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at Pine Bluff.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I renew my motion for an executive session.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, March 2, 1906, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 3156. An act to grant an honorable discharge from the military service to Robert C. Gregg—to the Committee on Military Affairs.
S. 2484. An act for the relief of Charles W. Howard—to the Committee on Military Affairs.
S. 1925. An act granting an honorable discharge to Peter Fleming—to the Committee on Military Affairs.
S. 660. An act granting an honorable discharge to Peter Green—to the Committee on Military Affairs.
S. 395. An act to provide for the appointment of a district judge for the western judicial district of South Carolina, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.
S. 4479. An act granting an honorable discharge to James Knight—to the Committee on Military Affairs.
S. 3411. An act to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William B. McCoy—to the Committee on Military Affairs.
S. 1726. an act making provision for conveying in fee the piece of strip of ground in St. Augustine, Fla., known as "The Lines," for school purposes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.
S. 661. An act for the relief of Levi J. Billings—to the Committee on War Claims.

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration Senate joint resolution 37.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas, by direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, asks unanimous consent to consider the following joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution No. 37.

Resolved, etc., That the tribal existence and government of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole tribes or nations of Indians in the Indian Territory are hereby continued in full force and effect for all purposes until the 4th day of March, A. D. 1907, unless hereafter otherwise provided by law; and all acts and parts of acts, so far as they conflict herewith, are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, the committee suggests several amendments, which I offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 3, after the word "and," add "present tribal;" and add the letter "s" to the word "government."
Line 6, after the word "purposes," add "under existing laws."
Strike out the following words: "The 4th of March, A. D. 1907, unless hereafter otherwise provided by law, and all acts and parts of acts, so far as they conflict herewith, are hereby repealed," and add in lieu thereof "all property of such tribes, or the proceeds thereof, shall be distributed among the individual members of said tribes."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, the adoption of this resolution is thought to be necessary, for the reason that, under existing laws and agreements with the Five Civilized Tribes, the tribal government of each of said tribes expires on the 4th day of March, 1906.

A bill has passed the House and is now pending in the Senate which provides for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory. It was expected that this bill would pass the Senate and become a law by the 4th of March, but it is apparent that it will not become a law by that time, and much of the tribal property will remain undisposed of.

There is still unallotted, of the lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, 4,500,000 acres; of the Cherokees, about 875,000 acres; of the Creek, about 606,000 acres. All of the lands of the Seminoles have been allotted.

It is contended by some who support this resolution that if some action is not taken by Congress to continue the present tribal relations and governments there is danger of this land becoming the property of the United States, and if it does there is fear that a land grant made to the State of Kansas for the purpose of building certain railroads, or to aid certain railroads in building, through the Indian Territory may attach. Personally, I think there is little if any danger of this grant attaching, even though this resolution should fail.

Under the treaty of the United States with the Cherokee Indians, made in 1828 and amended by the treaty of 1833, the United States agreed to grant to the Cherokees, and guaranteed to them forever, 7,000,000 acres of land described in said treaty, and also to guarantee to said Indians a perpetual outlet west and a free and unmolested use of all the country lying west of the western boundary of the 7,000,000 acres.

By this treaty the United States covenanted and agreed to convey the lands in fee simple title, but the treaty of 1846 provided that the lands covered thereby should revert to the United States if the Indians became extinct or abandoned the same. The patent also provides that the lands shall revert to the United States if the Cherokee Nation becomes extinct or abandons the same.

The question as to the effect of this clause in the patent of the Cherokees was referred to by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Holden v. Joy (17 Wallace, 250), in which the court says:

Strong doubts are entertained whether that condition in the patent is valid, as it was not authorized by the treaty under which it was issued. By the treaty the United States covenanted and agreed to convey the lands in fee simple title, and it may well be held that if that condition reduces the estate to less than a fee it is void.

The United States judge for the western district of Arkansas, in the case of the United States v. Ben Reese, at the May term of 1879, after reviewing the various treaties, laws, and decisions of the court with reference to the Cherokee lands of the Indian Territory, held that there is no limitation on the title conveyed by the United States to the Cherokees by the treaty of 1833; that if said treaty was inconsistent with the act of May 30, 1830, merely so much of it as was inconsistent with the language of the second article of the treaty of 1835 was a recognition of the cession of the lands, and if they had already been ceded to the Cherokees by the treaty of 1833, the agreement by the United States by the third article of the treaty of 1835 to give them a patent to these lands, according to the provisions of the act of May 28, 1830, was a mere nudum pactum. It was an attempt to place a restriction on the title which had already passed, and which, according to the first article of the treaty of 1833, was to be evidenced by a patent.

The court, after discussing the question on the basis that the condition in the patent is valid, says:

This Indian title being a base, qualified, or determinable fee, with only the possibility of reversion, and not the right of reversion, in the United States, all the estate is in the Cherokee Nation of Indians.

The patent to the Cherokees was issued on the 31st day of December, 1838.

By the third article of the treaty of the United States with the Creek Indians the United States agreed to grant a patent in fee simple to the Creek Nation of Indians for the lands of said nation. By this treaty and convention it was agreed that "whenever the same shall have been ratified by the President and the Senate of the United States the right thus granted by the United States shall be continued to said tribe of Indians so long as they shall exist as a nation and continue to occupy the country hereby assigned them." A patent was issued to the Creek Indians on the 11th day of August, 1851.

By treaty with the Choctaw Nation, of September 27, 1830, the United States agreed to convey to the Choctaw Nation a tract of country west of the Mississippi River in fee simple to them and to their heirs, to inure to them while they shall exist as a nation and live on it, but in the treaty of 1855, made with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, the United States agreed, pursuant to act of Congress of May 28, 1830, to secure and guarantee the lands embraced within the said limits to the members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes, their heirs and successors, to be held in common, so that each and every member of either tribe may have an equal and undivided interest in such whole, provided, however, that no part thereof shall ever be sold without the consent of both tribes, and that said lands shall revert to the United States if said Indians or their heirs become extinct or abandon the same.

It will be seen from this treaty that the Government of the United States agreed to convey to the Choctaws and Chickasaws identically the same title given to the Cherokees. In all of the agreements and laws passed since 1893 it has been the object of Congress to divide the lands of the Five Civilized Tribes so that each member would receive a fair and equal share of the tribal property.

In my judgment, under existing laws, the Government of the United States would have the right to dispose of the unallotted lands of these various tribes without further legislation and to sell what remained undisposed of to equalize allotments in accordance with the terms of existing agreements, but it seems that in 1866 the United States, for the purpose of aiding the Kansas and Neosha Valley Railroad Company, the same being a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Kansas, to construct and maintain a railroad, granted to the State of Kansas for the benefit of said railroad company every alternate section of land, or parts thereof designated by odd numbers, to the extent of 10 sections per mile on each side of said road, to be selected within 20 miles of the line of said road. By the eighth section of said act it authorizes and empowers said railroad company to extend and construct its road over the southern boundary of Kansas south through the Indian Territory to Red River at or near Preston, in the State of Texas, so as to connect with the railway now being constructed from Galveston to a point at or near Preston, in the said State, and the right of way through the Indian Territory, wherever said right is now reserved or may hereafter be reserved to the United States by treaty with the Indian tribes, is hereby granted to said company to the same extent as the grant by the sixth section of this act to the public lands. In all cases where the rights of way as aforesaid through the Indian lands shall not be reserved to the Government the said company shall, before constructing its road, procure the consent of the tribe or tribes interested, which consent, with all its terms and conditions, shall be previously approved and indorsed by the President and filed with the Secretary of the Interior. Section 9 provides that the same grants of lands through said Indian Territory are hereby made as provided in the first section of this act whenever the Indian title shall be extinct, by treaty or otherwise. The ratio per mile granted in the first section of this act provided that said lands become a part of the public lands of the United States.

Now, I do not believe this grant attaches, for two reasons. The first is the right was not reserved nor was it thereafter reserved to the United States by treaty with the Indian tribes, so the railroad was forced to take advantage of the other part of section 8, which provided the means by which they might secure right of way where the lands had not been reserved to the Government.

In each of the treaties made with the Civilized Tribes in 1866 provision was made for the granting of rights of way to railroads through the lands owned by the respective tribes. Second, two things were necessary to occur before this land grant could attach. The first was that the Indian title should be extinguished by treaty or otherwise, and the second was that the lands should become part of the public lands of the United States. The Indian title has not been extinguished in the manner contemplated by section 9 of the act of 1866, and the lands have not become a part of the public lands of the United States. A careful reading of the act of June 28, 1898, and of the various agreements made with the tribes, will convince any person that it was the intention of Congress and of the tribes to prevent this land ever becoming a part of the public lands of the United States.

The act of June 28, 1898, provided for the allotment for the exclusive use and occupancy of the surface of all the lands of the nations susceptible of allotment among the citizens thereof, giving to each, so far as possible, his fair and equal share thereof, considering the nature and fertility of the soil, location, and value of the same.

In the section providing for the allotment as aforesaid the following proviso is found:

That nothing herein contained shall in any way affect the invested legal rights which may have been heretofore granted by act of Congress, nor be so construed as to confer any additonal rights upon any parties claiming under any such act of Congress.

This proviso was inserted after a hearing of the attorneys who represented the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad, and the provisions of the act were drawn so as to avoid the grant ever attaching to the lands of these tribes.

The agreement with the Chickasaws and Choctaws provides that when allotments have been made the balance of the lands are to be sold at public auction and the proceeds placed in the Treasury and distributed as are other moneys of the tribes.

The Cherokee agreement provides that when allotments have been made the rest of the land shall be apportioned so as to equalize allotments.

The Creek agreement provides that the lands remaining unallotted and all undivided funds are to be used to equalize allotments, and further provides for the sale, at public auction, of all lands reserved when not needed, the proceeds to be deposited to the credit of the tribe.

The lands of the Seminoles have been allotted, so it is unnecessary to refer to this tribe.

It will be seen that the act of 1898 and the various agreements provide for a disposition of the lands of these tribes, so that no part of the same will ever become public lands of the United States.

The general counsel for the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad, which claims under the grant of 1866 as the railroad to which said grant was made, recognized that there was one way only to have this grant attach, and in his brief, filed with the committee, protested against the passage of the act of 1898 in the following language:

The company justly protests against any legislative action which shall either attempt to enact an expressed denial of its claims of right, or which shall make such disposition of the lands as will amount to such denial. Especially and rightfully does the company protest against legislation which attempts to destroy this claim of right by indirection. The uniform method of extinguishing Indian occupancy title has been by allotment of small tracts to individual members of the tribe, and subjection of the residue to the operation of the public-land laws in some form. The proceeds thus realized, or the larger part, have been placed in the Treasury in trust for the Indians, or divided per capita amongst them. If, then, Congress finds it necessary in this case to resort to unusual methods of disposition, such as omitting to declare an extingushment of the Indian title or to declare the lands or any part thereof to be public lands, is it not a direct recognition of the merits of the company's claim of right?

It will be seen from this that the general counsel for the company realized that under the bills which were then pending, and which afterwards became law, that the grant to their railroad could not, and would not, attach.

Under existing laws the tribal governments are to be extinguished on the 4th of March; but this does not, in my judgment, do away with the tribal relations. A change in the form of government would not change the character of the title by which the tribal property is held, and the United States would have the right to dispose of the lands in accordance with the terms of existing agreements, which would be to allot to each member his fair share, and to sell any unallotted lands and use the proceeds for the purpose of equalizing allotments.

The Supreme Court, in the case of the Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock (187 U. S., p. 294), held:

There is no question involved in this case as to the taking of property. The authority which it is proposed to exercise by virtue of the act of 1893 has relation merely to the control and development of tribal property, which still remains subject to the administrative control of the Government, even though the members of the tribe have been invested with the status of citizenship in recent legislation.

If the court thus holds in regard to the right of the Government to still control the tribal property after the members of the various tribes have become citizens, would it not also hold that the Government of the United States had the right to go further and allot lands under existing laws and agreements and to dispose of the tribal property under the provisions of said laws, the same as if the tribal government still existed? As a matter of fact, there is nothing but a shell of a government remaining among the Five Civilized Tribes.

While, in my judgment, this legislation is not at all necessary, because I do not believe that the grant to the railroad attaches or can attach, yet in view of the fact that the question has been raised by able lawyers at the other end of the Capitol, I think it safe to pass this resolution.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the necessity for the passage of this resolution arises from the fact that by recent acts of Congress the tribal government of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory will expire on March 4 this year. If this resolution is not passed, all of said Indians lose their identity as individuals of Indian tribes and become citizens of the United States. Heretofore these tribes have held their landed property in common as tribes. The title to said lands passed from the United States by virtue of treaties made with the Indian tribes and ratified by Congress, which treaties and acts authorized the administrative branch of the Government to issue patents to the lands specified to the respective tribes. In some instances these patents did not harmonize with nor convey to the tribes the title contracted for as specified in the treaties and acts of Congress. The authors of this resolution fear that if these tribal governments are permitted to become extinct on March 4 that all the lands held by them as tribes in common under the alleged defective patents will escheat or revert to the United States and again become public domain, and in that event that certain grants made to railway corporations by Congress—subsequent, however, to the treaties and patents made to the Indians—will attach to and carry the title now held by the Indians to the corporations now holding the subsequent grants, and in that event the Indians would lose all the lands covered by the grants made to the railroad corporations; and to prevent this loss to the Indians of their lands it is deemed wise to pass this resolution and permit the tribes to hold their lands in common until they are fully disposed of by Congress for the benefit of the Indians. I deem this a wise and prudent thing to do, as it fully guarantees to the Indians the lands contracted for by them from the Government and extinguishes whatever rights may be held in any reversionary interest by the railroad companies now owning said supposed grants. The grant referred to is found in 39 United States Statutes, page 238, section 8, under act approved July 25, 1866, as follows:

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That said Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized and empowered to extend and construct its railroad from the southern boundary of Kansas south, through the Indian Territory, to Red River, at or near Preston, in the State of Texas, so as to connect with the railway now being constructed from Galveston to a point at or near Preston, in said State; and the right of way through the Indian Territory, wherever such right is now reserved or may hereafter be reserved to the United States by treaty with the Indian tribes, is hereby granted to said company to the same extent as granted by the sixth section of this act through the public lands; and in all cases where the right of way, as aforesaid, through the Indian lands, shall not be reserved to the Government, the said company shall, before constructing its road, procure the consent of the tribes interested, which consent, with all its terms and conditions, shall be previously approved and indorsed by the President and filed with the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that the Indians would forfeit their lands by our failure to pass this resolution, for, in my judgment, the courts would hold that the treaties made with the various tribes, the acts of Congress, and the patents to the Indians would all be construed together, and, when so construed, that the courts would hold that the United States did not hold any reversionary interest in any of these lands to subsequently convey to any corporation or person. Hence, judging the questions here raised from a legal standpoint, as a lawyer, I do not believe that these lands could ever be recovered by the railroads, but, as a matter of prudence, I am in favor of passing this resolution.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CLERK FOR COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit the following report from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution No. 342.

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint an additional clerk to said committee, who shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $6 per day during the remainder of the present session.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman to make a statement to justify this increase.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, this is the same resolution which has been passed each year at the request of the chairman of this committee for this additional help in order to attend to the necessary work of the committee. It is not an additional employee at all.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 37) extending the tribal relations and government of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CLAPP, Mr. MCCUMBER, and Mr. DUBOIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1465) granting an increase of pension to Patrick Fallihee.

GEORGE W. HARMER.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Mrs. Annie L. Harmer, widow of George W. Harmer, deceased, late a folder on the rolls of the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to six months' pay at the rate of compensation received by him at the time of his death, and a further sum, not exceeding $250, on account of the funeral expenses of said George W. Harmer, said amounts to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

With the following amendments:

Strike out the words "Mrs. Anna L. Harmer, widow," and insert "David Harmer, administrator."

Before the word "George," in line 3, insert the words "estate of."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

NATURAL SPRING WATER.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized and directed to supply the committee rooms, cloakrooms, and offices connected with the House of Representatives with pure natural spring water, the same to be paid for out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman for some explanation of that resolution.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, it requires very little explanation, except that for some years the House has been supplied with natural spring water, and that supply has been cut off for some reason or other. The Clerk of the House prefers to have a resolution of this kind passed, so as to authorize him to pay for the spring water to be placed in the committee rooms. It is a very small expense and yet one that we thought was proper.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire where that spring is situated?

Mr. CASSEL. We have made no special contract in respect to that. It authorizes the Clerk to supply the water.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. From any spring that he desires?

Mr. CASSEL. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire of the gentleman whether the water furnished by the District of Columbia is unfit for drinking purposes?

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, I would say that a great many persons have suffered from drinking the water now being furnished, and, from my own experience, I would be afraid to drink it. Consequently, I always use water of this kind, as do most of the Members of the House, as I understand it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

UNION NEWS, THOMASTON, GA.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to submit the following privileged resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish to the House the following information, if not incompatible with the public service:

First. If a newspaper published at Thomaston, Ga., and known as "The Union News," has been at any time admitted to the mails as second-class matter; and, if so, when and for what length of time the said publication was admitted to the mails as second-class matter.

Second. If said newspaper, The Union News, has been excluded and denied admission to the mails as second-class matter; if so, when said newspaper was so denied admission to the mails as second class, and the facts upon which it was decided to exclude said newspaper from the mails as second-class matter; and to furnish to the House the decision and order of the Post-Office Department excluding said newspaper, The Union News, from the mails as second-class matter, and also the record in the Post-Office Department upon which such decision is based.

With the following amendment:

Strike out the word "service," in line 3, and insert in lieu thereof the word "interests."

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], the author of the resolution, such time as he may desire.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I shall not detain the House but a few moments in advocacy of the passage of this resolution. The reason why this resolution has been introduced by me is for the purpose of having the House informed of the facts and circumstances under which a newspaper published in the district which I have the honor to represent was excluded from the mails as second-class matter. I hold in my hand a copy of that newspaper. The paper for a year or more in this shape that I now present had been admitted to the mails as second-class matter. It is "The Union News," published at the instance of what is known as the "Farmers' Union of the State of Georgia," which is a part of the "Farmers' Union of the United States," and is the official organ of 40,000 farmers in Georgia and a part of an organization embracing within its membership 600,000 farmers of the United States. For a year or more the paper in the shape of the copy I hold in my hand of date March 6, 1905, was admitted to the mails as second-class matter, being a semiweekly issue. Some time in January or February of this year it was determined by the proprietors to issue the paper as a weekly paper instead of a semiweekly paper, and it was so changed and issued in a larger and more improved size and style. When this was submitted to the Post-Office Department for permission to be entered as second-class matter as a weekly paper instead of a semiweekly paper, there being no change in reference to the character of its publication, it still being devoted to the dissemination of public news and also of the matter particularly interesting to the farmers of Georgia and of that locality, the Postmaster-General, through the head of the bureau that has this matter in charge, has seen fit to exclude it from the mails at the rate for second-class matter. The issue of that paper of date February 5, 1906, a copy of which I have here and exhibit to the House, was the one submitted and is the paper that the Post-Office Department excluded from the second-class rate. There is no question raised that this publication did not have the requisite number of subscribers.

And I want to say, Mr. Speaker, to this House that while there was no effort to conceal the reasons why it was excluded, when I made a visit to this head of the bureau of the Post-Office Department that I never saw a more dogmatic assertion of power by the head of any bureau, or even in the head of a Department, when the statement was made that the paper had been excluded because it was devoted mainly and chiefly to advocating the interest of the people that it purposed to represent—the farmers of the State of Georgia and of the United States. Every other organization—the railroad employees, the locomotive engineers, the firemen, all have their organs which advocate their organization and the principles which they represent. The teachers of the United States are organized, and they have their journals. The printers, the merchants, and all trades and callings have and publish papers in their interest. I have here a publication called "American Economist," with a statment printed on the front page, as follows, in large, black type:

Devoted to the protection of American labor and industries.

It is published weekly by the American Protective Tariff League, and is entered in the New York post-office as second-class mail matter, and has been for years transmitted through the mails as such. This paper, the American Economist, is the official organ of the American Protective Tariff League and of the protectionists, and its every page, except the advertisements, contains mainly and almost solely letters and correspondence and articles maintaining the doctrines of the tariff "stand-patters," and is devoted altogether to the purpose of supporting the present high rates of the tariff. Take away from the Economist those parts of it which are devoted to upholding the doctrines of the high protective tariff and there would be nothing left of it but the advertisements. Yet no question is raised as to its right to the mails as second-class matter. The doctrines of protective tariff, in the opinion of the post-office bureau, should be promulgated at the cheap rates through the mail. I have here also a number of other publications which seem to be issued solely to further some particular trade, calling, or interest, which have been admitted to the mails as second-class matter. The merchant, the manufacturer, the printer, the railroad employee have their own organs devoted to the interest of each. These all can be and have been admitted to the mails under the second-class rate, without protest and without limit, and, I apprehend, almost without investigation, yet when a paper like this, the Union News, which advocates the interests of the millions of farmers of the country upon whose back and shoulders have ever rested the prosperity of our country, is excluded, because a clerk in a bureau of the Post-Office Department says it should not be permitted to go through the mails at the rates prescribed for it by Congress, because its chief purpose is the advocacy of the interests of the farmers of the country.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I deemed it proper that the House should have, not simply through me, but an official statement of the facts upon which this conduct has been based, and in the interest of this great class that this paper, though small in size, though published in a small city in my own district, seeks to advocate, in the interest of fairness and justness, in the interest of maintaining the right of every citizen high or low of every class, the farmer and everyone else, to have equal rights in the transportation of the periodicals and the papers of this country, and I have seen fit to introduce this resolution on my responsibility, and I now ask that the House shall pass it, so that we can have the information which will show us, Mr. Speaker, the character of the despotic rule that now exists in a department of the Post-Office, so that it may be removed by the people's legislators if it can be. [Applause.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Is it not a fact that a paper is issued under the auspices of the tariff league?

Mr. BARTLETT. I had that paper here a moment ago—the American Economist.

Mr. HEFLIN. And that it is published in the interest of the protective tariff?

Mr. BARTLETT. I have it here. It is called the "American Economist," which comes to me, as I presume it comes to everyone else, in a wrapper without any stamp on it, so I judge for that reason it comes under the second-class rate, and I submit to the House if outside of the advertisements you can find anything in this paper except the advocacy of the maintenance of the present Dingley rate of high tariff, then I will apologize for it. This indicates that this American Economist and these other periodicals that are disseminating through the mails at second-class rates represent the peculiar views which their authors and those interested in it advocate, but when a paper that is published mainly in the interest of eleven or twelve million farmers of the country undertakes to have the same privilege we are met by an iron-bound rule at the hands, I say, of a clerk in this Department, and it is time, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, that the United States Congress should wake up to the proposition and realize that we are being ruled not by ourselves so much as by the bureaus in the various Departments of this Government. [Applause.] And for one, if this simple resolution in reference to the injustice and wrong that has been done this paper, though never heard of before by the Members of this House except by myself, shall result in revealing to the House and revealing to the country the autocratic and despotic power that is being used in the Post-Office Department in this matter and matters of this kind, it will serve a great purpose not only to the Members of the House, but to the people of the country, whom we represent. [Applause.]

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, it would be well, perhaps, for the House not only to know as a general proposition that the Federal Government has become one of the greatest bureaucracies in the world, and that we have with us now a Government by construction—chiefly of bureau chiefs—but to go into some specifications for which an occasion is furnished by this resolution.

I understand this paper excluded from the mail as fourth-class matter has a correct number of paid-up, or bona fide, subscribers.

This paper which has been excluded from the mails contains seven pages of reading matter and only a little over one page of advertisements. It is true that on one page of it there is an advertisement of Tom Watson's Magazine, and perhaps that may, like a red flag, have infuriated the bureau chief to such an extent that he thought the entire publication ought to be excluded from the mails. It is true that there is an advertisement of one black horse mule, 10 years old, to be sold, and of a Jersey cow and certain acres of land and certain farms, and all that; so that they seem not to be advertisements of any of the great magnates of the country, of any people who are financiers or "Napoleons of finance," and perhaps the bureau chief acted upon the idea of de minimis non curat lex. The American Economist contains about four pages of advertisements, amongst which are the advertisements of the Pittsburg Plate Glass Company, of the great glass trust; and of the Iron Table Cutlery and Hardware Company, of the great cutlery trust; and the Continental Color and Chemical Company; and the Dyewood Company; and the Linotype Company, that all of the compositors are requesting us to break up as a trust. Perhaps those advertisements did not infuriate this bureau chief so much as these advertisements of horses and Jersey cows to sell. [Applause.] Then, when we compare the printed matter, Mr. Speaker, there is a little difference. This little homely Georgia sheet contains a letter from "Brother" Davis, telling of speeches made to a large crowd present of farmers organizing a union to try to help themselves with regard to the sale of their products. And then there comes from Carrollton, Ga., a communication about the humble pursuits of the plain people, stating that "the roll is growing," and that they are "standing back and watching," and are trying to do something for the agricultural interests of the people.

Then there comes an injunction to "do more for the Farmers' Union," with a piece of poetry, signed by one Mr. Faircloth. It does not compete as poetry with that of Milton, Keats, or Pope, but it contains some very good old doctrines about the rights of the people and equality amongst the people in the United States. The next article is headed "Paulding moving on nicely." It states that they have held a big farmers' meeting there, and they seem to want the other farmers of the State of Georgia to know it, for mutual encouragement, I suppose. Then there are some resolutions of respect to a deceased farmer, signed by three men, who are, I presume, very plain farmers. Then Brother East writes about the union in Polk, and what glorious work it is doing, and how the people are diversifying their crops. Then "Brother" Bruce writes of the union in Forsyth, and urges the people to "keep 'er rolling." Mighty plain language, that. Now, perhaps Brother Bruce or the speaker alone would be homely enough to use language of that sort. [Laughter.] But it is, at any rate, indicative of the purpose to go on and do well. Then there comes an article from "Brother" Carver, and Brother Carver seems disposed to think that the agricultural interests of the country ought to get a little bit more of the profit of the boasted progress of the country than they do. Then "Brother" Tally writes and says that the farmers ought to "take more papers" and keep up better with the times, and that it would be the very best thing for them. And then along comes a bureau chief and cuts out this paper, which advises them to take more papers, because, I suppose, he does not want them to keep up with the times. They might know too much to stand pat. [Laughter.] Then comes an article on "How systems change and revolutionize the world." And in view of what "Brother" Lawson, up in Massachusetts, has recently said, there is some truth in that.

Here are some of the things for which these people contend and the doctrine this little sheet, as their organ, preaches; no treason in them—"simple annals of the poor":

1. To discourage as much as possible the present mortgage and credit system.
2. To assist our members in buying and selling.
3. To labor for the agricultural classes in the science of crop diversification and scientific agriculture.
4. To constantly strive to secure entire harmony and good will among all mankind and brotherly love among ourselves.

That last object must have struck the bureau chief athwart his hull. [Laughter.]

5. To form a more adequate union with those in authority for a more rigid and impartial enforcement of the law, that crime, vice, and immorality may be suppressed.

That squints too much at enforcing the antitrust law for an average Republican bureau chief to tolerate.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, I hold in my hand a paper which has not been excluded by this bureau chief. It has not advertisements of the character I have indicated, but of the linotype trust, the plate-glass trust, and all the balance of it, and its advertisement contents recommended the course of nonexclusion, I suppose, to that bureau chief. What of its reading matter? First, there is a very oracular and severe article about "Germany's last scheme to write down the American tariff by opening wide the doors to undervaluation," and we are about to report this morning some important information from the Secretary of State showing how we have entered into this vile "scheme" with Germany. The American Economist did not know when it wrote that what the Republican Administration was going to do. Then the next is, "The need of ship subsidies;" so that you can tax the farmers, the mechanics, the lawyers, the dentists, the preachers of the country to bolster up the fellow who would rather engage in what he calls the "unprofitable industry of shipbuilding that engage in some industry that is profitable. Then there follows the purpose of this newspaper, "Published weekly by the American Protective Tariff League," and devoted to a great many purposes of the league that I will not stop to read. This league is a manufacturers' union. But what peculiarly endeared the sheet to that kind of bureau chief is the article over here, the one reciting "They don't want revision." I do not know who "they" are. I have not had time to read it. Another is entitled "The logic of the situation. To stand pat is a display of wisdom indicated by all the facts." [Laughter.] Ah, my friend the Speaker smiles when he hears his well-known political doctrines enunciated in such strong phraseology. [Renewed laughter.] And how it should appeal to his heart to approve the merits of this bureau chief and the great wisdom that he has displayed in not having excluded this organ of the manufacturers' union from the mails, although he has made a sacrifice of this little paper, the organ of a farmers' union and devoted to the farmers' interest, and excluded it, although the little paper has one page of advertisements from very humble people, but one page, and the other has four pages from people who have been made rich by wresting the laws of the country to their own purposes. I think it is wonderful they did not reward that paper that helps them to wrest legislation by giving to it sixteen pages of advertisements.

Mr. Speaker, I say we are becoming a bureaucracy and a government by executive construction. Some fellow in Canada goes to raising frogs legs and he competes with a northeastern frog-leg farmer, and along comes a commissioner who decides that frog legs are dressed poultry, in order that this beautiful "government by construction" that we are now carrying on, and chiefly by bureau chiefs and commissioners, may be provided, under the provisions of a Republican tariff measure, with a construction, if not law, to protect the American frog-leg raisers.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. WILLIAMS. In a moment. Not long ago I noticed that a lot of these little piano hammers began to come in—little wooden things, with a little piece of felt on the tapping part, that is put there to keep the wood from injuring the string of the piano. And the cry was raised that that was going to injure "a great American industry," and as a consequence our beautiful Government by construction held them construed to be woolen goods, partially or wholly manufactured. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Speaker, what is the character of authority lodged in this man? If he can arbitrarily exclude one of these papers from the mail on the ground that it is an advertising sheet, should he not exclude the other on exactly the same ground? Now I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I want to ask the gentleman if he is not aware that the Treasury Department has not ruled that frog legs were dressed poultry? Does he not know that the Department never so ruled? But under what is known as the "similitude clause" of the present law, and of many prior laws, it is required that where goods are not on the free list and are partially manufactured that they shall be rated at the rate imposed on similar articles, and that the Department held them to be similar to dressed poultry, but never held them to be dressed poultry?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Whereupon they ruled them to be similar articles and made them pay the duty imposed on dressed poultry. They did not rule that frog legs were physically dressed poultry, but legally dressed poultry, constructively dressed poultry, tariff-taxed dressed poultry, and taxed the people on them as dressed poultry, and in that far only I am wrong and recede from my exact statement. [Laughter and applause.] How frog legs get to be "partly manufactured" goods I leave the gentleman from Iowa to explain. On the ground, I suppose, that the legs are "partly manufactured" frog. By the way, Mr. Speaker, a gentleman makes the suggestion that they made that ruling turning frogs into tariff chickens, although "there was not a feather on the frog." I think that ought to go into the RECORD. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRIGGS. Having reported this resolution from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, I deem it my duty to say to the House that it was a unanimous report, and that in that committee there was no partisan nor political bias displayed by any member thereof. It is a unanimous report, voted for by Republicans and Democrats alike, and it was not reported to the House with any idea, upon the part of the committee, of any criticism from the committee upon the bureau chief, however much he may deserve it. I regret that this discussion has taken what may seem to be a political turn. Nevertheless, as I have said, the committee unanimously reports the resolution, and I now move its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill making appropriations for the Army.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 14397—the Army appropriation bill—with Mr. BOUTELL in the chair.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I now offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers the amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 33, in line 4, after the words "drays and" insert the word "repair."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, as this provision reads at present, it provides for the purchase and repair of ships and other vessels. Immediately following this paragraph in the bill are two paragraphs providing for the purchase of vessels necessary for garrison and other purposes, and under these circumstances it seems to me that this particular appropriation should be restricted to the repair only of such ships.

Mr. HULL. I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HULL. That amendment would prevent the quartermaster buying a small launch that is absolutely necessary at a great many posts, and I make the point of order that it is a change in law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I submit that the gentleman's point of order is too late, the amendment having already been debated.

Mr. HULL. I think not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, it is, undoubtedly.

Mr. HULL. I think the point of order is raised in time. I simply gave my reasons for making it. I yield, however, to the opinion of the Chair on the subject. It changes existing law, and I intended to make the point of order when I got up.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I submit to the Chair that the point of order was made too late. I had debated the amendment, and then the gentleman from Iowa made the point of order.

Mr. HULL. I was on my feet.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The point of order must be made immediately.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is quite correct, but if the gentleman from Iowa states that he attempted to make the point of order in the confusion the Chair must accept his statement. There was great confusion in the House.

Mr. HULL. I will state to the Chair that I had to have the amendment reported again before I could tell what it was.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But if the gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. It is impossible for the Members or the Chair to hear what is being said.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I was rising to a point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the amendment was offered and reported. No gentleman rose to make a point of order. I proceeded in my own time to debate the amendment, and, after having stated my reason for the adoption of the amendment, the gentleman from Iowa then asked to have it again reported, and upon the amendment being reported a second time, after debate, he made the point of order, and I submit that the point of order comes too late. He should have reserved it before any debate at all was had upon the amendment.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I got up the first time to ask what the amendment was. I could not hear a word that was said. I knew nothing about it. The amendment was again reported.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the notes of the Official Reporter——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please suspend. The gentleman from New York is entirely correct from his point of view, but the Chair will state that the gentleman from Iowa was on his feet, and the Chair was endeavoring to secure order, and the Chair understands the gentleman from Iowa to state that he attempted to attract the attention of the Chair and make the point of order, and under that statement the Chair holds that the point of order was made in due time. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Iowa to state what the point of order is based upon?

Mr. HULL. The law now provides, Mr. Chairman, for the purchase and repair of ships.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I should like to submit a question. I have not yet been able to hear one word said in connection with this subject, except what has been uttered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], and I ask that the amendment be read again.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman from Iowa claim that he attempted to make the point of order before I debated the amendment?

Mr. HULL. I did not hear anything which the gentleman said, and what I was trying to get at was to find out what the amendment was.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I submit, then, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman should have first reserved his point of order and then have ascertained what the amendment was, and not having done that he is too late to submit his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New York that the Chair has ruled and held that the point of order was made in ample time.

Mr. HULL. Now, the present language of the law has been the language of the law for a great many years; it is—

Purchase and repairs of wagons, carts, and drays, and of ships and other vessels and boats required for the transportation of troops and supplies for garrison purposes.

Now, I submit when he puts in this amendment, which cuts off the power to purchase any vessel whatever, he is changing existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman what law the gentleman from Iowa refers to?

Mr. HULL. About all the law there is is in the bill; it is a change of the language of the bill. I do not think there is any other law than this.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I will again attempt to state the purpose of this amendment. In the two paragraphs that immediately follow this paragraph of the bill there are items for the purchase of this kind of ship, lighters, launches, and yawls, and the combined appropriation amounts to $365,000. They ask in these two immediately following items $265,000 for the purchase of ships, lighters, launches, and yawls, and it appears to me that this item for the transportation of the Army should not be available for the purpose. Under the language of the bill it reads "For the purchase of wagons, carts, drays, and ships and other vessels," and there would be three specific appropriations from which this kind of vessels could be provided. For that reason I submit that the House should restrict this appropriation to the repair of these different ships, since the gentleman asks specific appropriations for other purposes in another paragraph.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York prevails, it will absolutely cut off any power to purchase the character of vessels that has always been recognized as necessary for the use of the Quartermaster and other departments in the administration of affairs. The gentleman refers to another provision in the bill, commencing with line 11, "For completing the equipment of military posts with the necessary lighters, launches, and yawls for submarine-mine work, including the purchase of one torpedo planter for use on the Pacific coast," etc., as a duplicate of the language in this paragraph. There is no duplication, and the gentleman knows that the very minute that paragraph is read the gentleman's committee will raise the point of order on it. The gentleman has not been fair to the House in the statement, because, if this language is put in, it will absolutely, in my judgment, work harm and not economy, but will make an increased expenditure in the hire of boats. The amendment should not be adopted, and I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has the Quartermaster's Department stated that it desired to purchase any launch, yawl, or any other vessel out of this appropriation for the coming year?

Mr. HULL. It has purchased a great many.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But has it stated that it wants to do it in the coming year?

Mr. HULL. It is a provision that is necessary to be kept in the bill so that they can purchase them as they need them. They may not need any and they may not have to do any repairs. Why should we change the law in this respect now?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Because I would like to compel the Department, like all others, to get specific appropriations for specific purposes and use the appropriations for the purposes for which they are made. Unless the gentleman can state that the Quartermaster's Department intends to, or has estimated or suggested that it would require the purchase of vessels out of this appropriation, I submit that it should not have the power to do so.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, that proposition is not a fair one either. The question of what may happen during the current year is something no man can tell. Let me ask the gentleman a question. We have a post on the Potomac River—Fort Washington—and the only way in which you can get there is by one of these small boats. We have other posts all through the country that are absolutely cut off from any communication with the outside world except by telegraph and by small boats. Suppose one of the boats should be sunk at Pugets Sound. Suppose one should blow up and be destroyed. The gentleman's amendment would make it so that we could not use a dollar of this appropriation for establishing communication with the rest of the world. It has not been abused.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have other boats that could be used.

Mr. HULL. Oh, they could have other boats that could be used, and then you would deprive somebody else of them. There could be no good result from the amendment, and there may be great harm.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have the power to hire boats.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman is from New York, and I believe there is a fort there called Fort Hamilton, and there is a little ferryboat operated by the Government that goes to Governors Island.

Mr. FITZGERALD. To New York City.

Mr. PARKER. There is a ferryboat that runs down there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. PARKER. The Government has always bought ferry boats to go to forts on islands. Does the gentleman mean to say that he is going to cut the Government off from the right to get to its forts wherever they are put in the middle of streams, as they are in many harbors?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; that statement is not accurate. They have ample vessels to go to every post around the city of New York at present, and if anything should happen to any of the boats there they would have no difficulty whatever, even with this amendment adopted, in obtaining ample service to communicate with those posts.

Mr. PARKER. How would they obtain it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have boats there that could be used, and there is no danger of these boats blowing up or sinking so rapidly during the coming year if this amendment is put on.

Mr. HULL. How does the gentleman know there is such a supply of boats on hand?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, does the gentleman, who is the head of this committee, and who is supposed to have that information, know whether there are sufficient boats or not?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, let us have a vote on the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like an answer to that question, if the gentleman can give the information.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out, in line 24, page 33, and in line 1, page 34, the words "but in no case shall more than 50 per cent of full amount of service be paid."

Also strike out the words "be computed upon the basis of," in lines 2 and 3, on page 34, and insert the words "in no case exceed 50 per cent of."

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I will state for the benefit of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs and of the gentlemen of the House that this amendment is intended simply to make clear what I believe to be the present intention. As the act now reads, referring to compensation to be paid to land-grant railroads for transportation, it says, "but in no case shall more than 50 per cent of full amount of service be paid," which does not, to my mind, express anything very definite. We do not pay service; we pay compensation for service. Then the act now proceeds, "provided that such compensation shall be computed upon the basis of the tariff or lower special rates for like transportation performed for the public at large," which seems somewhat in contradiction with the previous statement that in no case shall more than 50 per cent of full amount of service be paid.

Now, my amendment simply provides this: It strikes out the words "but in no case shall more than 50 per cent of full amount of service be paid," and strikes out also the words in line 2, page 34, "be computed upon the basis of," and amends so that the proviso shall read:

Provided, That such compensation shall in no case exceed 50 per cent of the tariff or lower special rates for like transportation performed for the public at large.

It simply makes it clear that to these land-grant railroads the payment for Army transportation shall in no case exceed 50 per cent of the tariff or other lower special rates paid for like transportation by the public.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I suppose on the theory that any language would not be subject to a point of order, even where it changes the current of appropriation, I will withdraw the point of order and ask for a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa withdraws his point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. OLMSTED) there were—ayes 11, noes 20.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For completing the equipment of military posts with the necessary lighters, launches, and yawls for submarine mine work, including the purchase of one torpedo planter for use on the Pacific coast, $150,000.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that this paragraph is not authorized by existing law, that it changes the existing law, and that the matter is not a matter within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs to report, but within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations, and upon the point of order I desire to be heard.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard in opposition to the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Rule XI provides that all proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows, namely: Subjects relating to fortifications and coast defenses to the Committee on Appropriations. The same rule provides that the following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time in the matters herein stated, namely, the committees having jurisdiction of appropriations, the general appropriation bills. It must be borne in mind that the rule provides that the Committee on Appropriations shall have jurisdiction not of seacoast fortifications, but of "seacoast fortifications and coast defenses." Under this rule the Committee on Appropriations has always exercised sole and exclusive jurisdiction in reference to the submarine mine defenses of the United States. They are as distinctive a part of the coast defense as seacoast guns. Now, this provides for "completing the equipment of military posts with the necessary lighters, launches, and yawls for submarine mine work, including the purchase of one torpedo planter for use on the Pacific coast." It will not do for gentlemen to say, as was intimated here, that a torpedo planter is simply a vessel for the purpose of transportation. The very contention upon which the Department claims the right and the need to buy or construct a torpedo planter is because the ordinary boat is not suitable for that purpose. If it be suitable for that purpose, then out of the abundance of Army transports and vessels purchased under the preceding section of this bill an abundant supply and the proper means for planting these torpedoes is already on hand or can be purchased, but it is asserted here, and will be claimed by the gentleman from California interested in this enterprise as the Representative of those people, that with the common and ordinary boats you could not lay torpedoes in San Francisco Bay in thirty days. Why? Because in order that you may expeditiously plant these torpedoes you must have not an ordinary boat, but a boat especially constructed for that purpose as an auxiliary submarine defense, a part of the seacoast defense, and in the face of the fact that this is a special boat, necessarily specially constructed to meet the need of submarine mine planting, and in the face of the fact that the matter of submarine defense is solely within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations the Quartermaster-General of the Army sent his estimate, if ever he sent any to anybody, to the Committee on Military Affairs through the Secretary of War. They never apply to the committee having jurisdiction of this subject at all, but seek to put this item into this bill, which seems upon its very face to be distinctively a part of the coast defense of the United States. If specially constructed vessels known as "torpedo planters" are not part of the coast defense, then no specific items can be said to be a part of the coast defense. I grant that if this were a boat generally used by the Quartermaster's Department for miscellaneous purposes and not specially constructed for this purpose it could be bought under the preceding section of this bill and then there would be no necessity for this item, but if this boat is to be specially constructed of a peculiar type for this purpose it is decidedly part of the coast defense of the United States and not within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs.

They have no jurisdiction of cables to connect submarine mines with the mining casemates. They have no jurisdiction of the construction of the mining casemates. They have no jurisdiction of the provision of explosives for the submarine mines. They have nothing to do with the submarine mines directly or indirectly. They are a part of the coast defense of the United States. This item might have been adroitly drawn to conceal its purpose, and I congratulate the Committee on Military Affairs upon the fairness and the candor displayed at least in avowing in the very language of the bill that this is for the purchase of one torpedo planter for use on the Pacific coast, and other items, $150,000.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Certainly, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I desire to ask the gentleman if, in the broad sense, the whole Army establishment is not a part of the coast defense?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. No; it is not part of the coast defense.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. On the theory that they may be called upon to defend the coast?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is no part of the coast defense.

Mr. HULL. In the Book of Estimates, page 144, is found "For completing the equipment of military posts with the necessary lighters, launches, and yawls for submarine-mine work, including the purchase of one torpedo planter for use on the Pacific coast." That is the estimate submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

In the hearings before the committee, on page 64, we find this matter entered into as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The next item, on page 38, is new legislation. It reads:

"For completing the equipment of military posts with the necessary lighters, launches, and yawls for submarine mine work, including the purchase of one torpedo planter for use on the Pacific coast (submitted), $150,000."

We provided for the submarine-mine work and all that under the head of engineer work.

General HUMPHREY. Not for the vessels used in this work, for which this is an estimate. We have been furnishing them heretofore.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the need for a special appropriation in the matter if the same line of work is already appropriated for elsewhere?

General HUMPHREY. That has heretofore been done out of appropriation for transportation of the Army.

The CHAIRMAN. This is on page 38 of the bill. You did not pay for that out of transportation of the Army, did you?

General HUMPHREY. The torpedo planters and transportation facilities of that nature were paid for from that appropriation.

The whole testimony will show that all of these vessels—the Burnside, for instance—have been carried by the Army bill from its beginning. The Burnside laid the cable in the Philippine Islands. It laid the cable in Alaska. It is used wherever on the Pacific coast it becomes necessary to use a cable ship, and yet it has been all the time under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question there? You do not claim that vessel is only confined to use in connection with seacoast defense?

Mr. HULL. No; I do not claim this is, because this refers to posts; and my understanding is, Mr. Chairman, that in the maneuvering of the Army, and in these matters of infantry, cavalry, and all branches of the Army, it is defending the coast, as we call it, because that is where it happens to be located—because they use this vessel in these maneuvers and practices, and also use it for communication with the different posts. That is the evidence before us.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Military Affairs has never desired, never attempted, and has no thought of trying to invade the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations for the purpose of taking the fortifications from them; but where you are appropriating for posts and for the communication with posts, because it happens as an incident that they use it in these maneuvers, we make effective all lines of the Army, and it does not therefore destroy the character of the vessel to the point of making it a part of the coast defense.

And not only that, Mr. Chairman, but it is on the same line we had up the other day. It is a movable part of the war establishment, not of coast defense only, but everything that comes in the line of communication with the posts. And if the Burnside is carried on our appropriation bill, and if these other boats are carried on our appropriation bill, it seems to me that the point of order is not good in this case.

The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] desires to be heard.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, within the past three years there have been constructed for use on the Atlantic seaboard four of these torpedo planters. They were constructed out of the money appropriated for the transportation of the Army.

Mr. HULL. And are under the jurisdiction of the Quartermaster's Department.

Mr. KAHN. They are, as the chairman of the committee has said, under the jurisdiction of the Quartermaster-General's Department of the Army. These vessels are used for purposes of instruction in the various fortifications on the Atlantic seaboard. One of them is stationed permanently at the School of Submarine Defense, at Fort Totten, N. Y. The others go from fort to fort, and the officers in command instruct the torpedo companies and detachments at the various fortifications how to lay the submarine mines promptly and effectively, so that in case of war the men who are connected with that branch of the service will know how to promptly and effectively perform their duties.

There is no such vessel at the present time on the Pacific coast. The testimony before the Committee on Military Affairs indicates strongly the necessity for such a vessel on that coast. It would take thirty days at the present time, with the facilities at hand, to mine the harbor of San Francisco alone. It would take a very long time to mine Puget Sound. It would take a very long time to mine the mouth of the Columbia River. The general in command of the artillery corps of the Army states specifically that it is much more difficult to mine the harbors on the Pacific coast than it is to mine those on the Atlantic coast, because the channels are so swift there. In consequence it is a much more difficult problem.

Now, in regard to the point of order, it seems that these boats are exactly analogous to the apparatus for directing the fire control of field artillery that was discussed here the other day. As I understand it, torpedoes are authorized in the fortification bill. They are delivered to the Government just as the field guns authorized in the fortifications appropriation bill are delivered to the Government. But the method of bringing these torpedoes into action is not unlike the method that is employed in bringing the field guns into action. The horses and harness that are necessary to move the field gun into its proper place are provided for in the military appropriation bill; and, in like manner, the ship that takes these torpedoes from the depots where they are stored and plants them in the proper places in the various harbors of the United States so that they might become effective against an enemy seems to me should be provided for in the military appropriation bill.

Mr. Chairman, this is the first time that this question has been raised in the House. These vessels are of comparatively recent origin. The effectiveness of submarine torpedoes was demonstrated in the late war between Japan and Russia. It is a comparatively new branch of military science. It was a submarine mine that destroyed the Russian flagship Petropavlovsk off Port Arthur on April 13, 1904. The gentleman who made the point of order claims that these torpedo planters are purely coast-defense vessels. I want to call the Chair's attention to the fact that the Appropriations Committee might claim, with equal force, that they have the right to appropriate for all coast-defense vessels. Under the rules governing this House all appropriations affecting fortifications and the coast defense emanate from the Committee on Appropriations, and all appropriations affecting the naval establishment come from the Committee on Naval Affairs. Now, there is a line of vessels constructed by the Navy known absolutely as coast-defense vessels. I refer to the monitors. And the gentleman might with equal propriety claim that these vessels should not be provided for by the Committee on Naval Affairs, but that they should be recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, because they are used solely for coast defense.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. May I ask the gentleman from California a question?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Has this lighter been provided for in the military appropriation bill prior to this one?

Mr. KAHN. There has never heretofore been such an item in any military appropriation bill or any other bill. It is entirely new legislation. I admit that; but I say that there is great need of it.

Mr. HULL. It was never estimated for before.

Mr. KAHN. It was never estimated for before.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. I understand the gentleman to say that this is the first time it has been carried in the military appropriation bill?

Mr. KAHN. This is the first time it has been carried in any bill. It is entirely new, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Then, as I understand, when the torpedoes are planted they are part of the coast defense.

Mr. KAHN. And the field gun is also a part of the national defense, and yet the chairman of the committee held the other day that appliances for the manipulation of these guns were not a part of the guns, and so, by a parity of reasoning, the ship that places these torpedoes in position should not be considered as being part of the torpedo.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, on the statement of fact, that this is the first time that this has ever been carried in a military bill. That is a reason why the chairman might decide it upon the phraseology, and it would seem to be necessary to decide for the Appropriation Committee, as when these torpedoes are planted they are a part of the coast defenses of the country and included within fortifications, and the Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction of appropriations for the coast defense. It is therefore properly included within the jurisdiction of the fortifications bill, and as this is a new question, and if upon passing upon it there might seem to be some doubt, then the Chair ought not to rule in favor of the Committee on Military Affairs, but should resolve the doubt in favor of the Committee on Appropriations. When the powers of this committee were distributed, in the Forty-ninth Congress, and six bills were taken from it, a minority report was made by Mr. Randall, in which he predicted that it would be very dangerous to give to committees which had power of general legislation the power to make appropriations for the subjects upon which they had the power to legislate. And he asserted that the appropriations would increase very largely in the future. That prediction has been verified to the letter. The statement made in that report was the same argument that was advanced by Mr. McKinley, late President, and then a Member of Congress, and Mr. Garfield, of Ohio.

And it was asserted then that the committees would become the special representatives of the Departments for which they made appropriations, and upon which they had the power to legislate.

That also has been verified by experience. To-day, if you will look about in this House for the chairmen of the large committees having jurisdiction over appropriations, you will not find them in their seats, except when their bills are under discussion. You will find them in their committee rooms. They are intrusted now with the power of legislating and also with the power of appropriating, and that very system has operated to take these gentlemen from the floor and confine them to their committee rooms, thus depriving the House of their services in general legislation. They have become inevitably the special champions or special advocates of the Departments for which they have the power to make appropriations. Now, as these several committees make their appropriations, not with an eye single to the total volume of revenue which we have to expend, but each with an eye single to the needs of the special Department which it is serving, it would be bad to increase the powers of these several committees, which already have the power of legislation, by a ruling of the Chair; and if it is a doubtful question—and it seems to me that it is—then I think the Chair ought to resolve that doubt in favor of that committee which is not the servant or the champion of any Department of this Government; which cares for no one Department more than another, but which looks to the total of the revenue of the Government, and makes its appropriations with an eye upon the total revenues and the needs of all the Departments, and not with regard solely to the special needs of any one Department as against the other Departments of the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to discuss the merits of this proposition. I make no question as to the necessity of this vessel. My esteemed friend from California, who has given it some investigation, thinks it is a meritorious proposition, and I do not care to dispute that question with him. I am satisfied that he is probably correct in that; but I do not want it overlooked that while expressly insisting upon the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations over this item, I insist that it is new legislation, which in no event is justified upon this bill.

But I want to call attention to this proposition: The installation of submarine mines is as distinctly a part of the coast defense as the installation of a seacoast cannon in any part of the fortifications becomes a part of the fortifications. The fact that these mines are removed at times and then replaced does not make the placing of them any less a part of the coast defense of the United States, and it might as well be claimed that, while we were clothed with jurisdiction to report bills, to erect emplacements, and to buy guns, the expense incident to installation of the seacoast cannon was a matter within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs as to claim that the expense incident to the installation of a submarine mine is not a part of the coast defense. This item bears the same relation to the coast defense by submarine methods that the installation of the seacoast cannon bears to the ordinary seacoast fortifications. This is the instrumentality for installing the seacoast defense, and complete jurisdiction of the seacoast defense inevitably and of necessity carries with it the sole jurisdiction to report appropriations for the means of installation of that defense just as fully and just as completely as it carries with it the power to report for the expenses of the installation of the seacoast guns.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The point of order made by the gentleman from Iowa raises again the question of jurisdiction between the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Military Affairs. The Chair has again been referred to the Book of Estimates, furnished by the Executive Departments of Congress, as a ground for holding that these items should go to the Committee on Military Affairs. The present occupant of the chair must again express his emphatic dissent against this body being influenced in the interpretation of its rules by the Executive Departments.

I do not know of any place where the noninterference of the executive with the legislative departments should be more carefully or more jealously guarded than in this House; and whether the Book of Estimates calling for certain items from certain committees is based upon an ignorance of the rules of this House or upon a conscious intention to influence the course of appropriations contrary to the rules of the House, the present occupant of the chair believes that it would be the unanimous opinion of this body that such estimates sent in such way should not be construed as affecting in any way the rules of this body. The question then is whether the items in this paragraph come under the rules by which the Military Affairs Committee takes jurisdiction of all those matters relating to the military establishment and to public defense, including appropriation for its support, or whether they go to the Appropriations Committee, which has jurizdiction among other things of fortifications and coast defenses. It is admitted in the argument that the submarine mines are for the defense of the coast, that the torpedo planting is for the purpose of planting torpedoes in the harbors on our coast line. So that it would seem from the debate quite clear to the Chair that these items belong exclusively to the fortification bill.

But there is another method of determining what the jurisdiction of the committee having charge of the fortification bill is in that particular measure, and the Chair has endeavored to examine the fortification bills prior to the division of the jurisdiction of the committee, and the Chair will read the items from the last fortification bill passed by Congress before the division of the jurisdiction as showing what was included in this bill when the division took place. In the bill making provision for the fortifications passed in the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress are these items:

For the purchase of movable submarine torpedoes, propelled and controlled by power operated and transmitted from shore stations, as may be recommended by the Board of Engineers of the Army of the United States and approved by the Secretary of War, $50,000.

For improvements, competitive test, and purchase of motors for movable torpedoes, $25,000.

For purchase of appliances for submarine mines for harbor defense, $10,000.

For continuation of torpedo experiments and for practical instruction of engineer troops in the details of the service, $20,000.

So that it seems clear to the Chair from the character of these instrumentalities, and principally from the fact that the same items, or exactly similar items, were uniformly carried in the fortifications bill for twenty years and were in the last bill when the division of jurisdiction took place, that these items belong to the fortifications bill; and the Chair so holds, and sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Construction of cable ship: For the construction of a seagoing cable ship of about 900 net tonnage for use in repairing and keeping in proper condition the fire-control submarine cables used in connection with the system of harbor defense on the Atlantic seaboard, $215,000.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, to this paragraph I make the same point of order as the one made to the paragraph immediately preceding.

The CHAIRMAN. And for the same reason the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Barracks and quarters, Philippine Islands: Continuing the work of providing for the proper shelter and protection of officers and enlisted men of the Army of the United States lawfully on duty in the Philippine Islands, including the acquisition of title to building sites when necessary, and including also shelter for the animals and supplies, and all other buildings necessary for post administration purposes, $150,000.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill how many troops we have in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. HULL. I can not answer that with any exactness. The last adjutant's report to the Military Secretary will tell the number. I will say that a great many are being sent there now, and it is the purpose to accumulate there fifteen or twenty thousand troops.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. How much have we already spent for the purpose of erecting or constructing barracks in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. HULL. I should say in the neighborhood of $3,000,000. That is an offhand guess.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. And at how many places have we erected posts?

Mr. HULL. I think there are about 400 posts over there, but they are not all permanent barracks. We have barracks at Manila, Iloilo, and Cebu, and on the island of Mindanao. And we are having permanent barracks built in the Moro country.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Maintenance of the Army War College: For supplying the necessary fuel for heating the Army War College building at Washington Barracks and for lighting the building and grounds; also for pay of a chief engineer, at $1,200 per annum; an assistant engineer, at $900; four firemen, at $720 each; one elevator conductor, at $720, $9,400.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve a point of order on that to make an inquiry of the gentleman in charge of the bill. As I understand it, it is entirely new.

Mr. HULL. It is for the occupation of the War College. I am perfectly willing the gentleman should make the point of order, if he desires. I do not wish to discuss it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I would like to get at the facts.

Mr. HULL. It is for the occupation, on completion, of the War College, which will be occupied the 30th of June, providing this provision goes in.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It is to provide for the personnel of the new War College?

Mr. HULL. That is all.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

Medical and Hospital Department: For the purchase of medical and hospital supplies, including disinfectants for military posts, camps, hospitals, hospital ships, and transports; for expenses of medical supply depots; for medical care and treatment of officers, enlisted men, and contract surgeons of the Army on duty, and of prisoners of war and other persons in military custody or confinement, at posts and stations for which no other provision is made, under such regulations as shall have been or shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War; for the proper care and treatment of epidemic and contagious diseases in the Army or at military posts or stations, including measures to prevent the spread thereof, and the payment of reasonable damages not otherwise provided for, for bedding and clothing injured or destroyed in such prevention; for the pay of male and female nurses, not including the Nurse Corps (female), and of cooks and other civilians employed for the proper care of sick officers and soldiers, under such regulations fixing their number, qualifications, assignment, pay, and allowances as shall have been or shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War; for the pay of civilian physicians employed to examine physically applicants for enlistment and enlisted men, and to render other professional services from time to time under proper authority; for the pay of other employees of the Medical Department; for the payment of express companies and local transfers employed directly by the Medical Department for the transportation of medical and hospital supplies, including bidders' samples and water for analysis; for supplies for use in teaching the art of cooking to the Hospital Corps; for the supply of the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark.; for advertising, laundry, and all other necessary miscellaneous expenses of the Medical Department, $623,000: Provided, That hereafter the purchase of medicines and medical stores or the engagement of services not personal for the Medical Department of the Army may be made by the Medical Department in open market in the manner common among business men when the aggregate of the amount required does not exceed $200: Provided further, That no contract or purchase on behalf of the United States shall be made, unless the same is authorized by law or is under an appropriation adequate to its fulfillment, except in the War and Navy Departments, for clothing, subsistence, forage, fuel, quarters, transportation, or medical and hospital supplies, which, however, shall not exceed the necessities of the current year: Provided further, That all persons admitted to treatment in the general hospital at Fort Bayard, N. Mex., shall, while patients in said hospital, be subject to the rules and articles for the government of the armies of the United States: Provided further, That hereafter all moneys arising from dispositions of serviceable medical and hospital supplies authorized by law and regulation shall constitute one fund on the books of the Treasury Department, which shall be available to replace medical and hospital supplies throughout the fiscal year in which the dispositions were effected and throughout the following fiscal year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 39, line 15, after the word "dollars," insert "and every such purchase or employment shall be promptly reported to the Secretary of War for approval, under such regulations as he may prescribe."

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I think that is the law now, but I have no objection to putting it in again.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This language is contained in the bill, page 46, in reference to another provision of the same character.

Mr. HULL. My recollection is that the general law provides for that, but I have no objection to its going in here.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment that is recommended by the Surgeon-General. On page 38, line 7, after the word "duty," insert the words "and for applicants for enlistment while held under observation." I will state the reasons for the amendment, that under the present plan of enlisting troops they are not finally mustered into service at the place of enlistment, except at the depots and recruiting stations like Columbus, Ohio, and others, and are there examined before being finally mustered in. If one of these parties held for "observation," as they call it, becomes sick, it would be impossible for the medical officers of the United States to give him the proper medical attendance, and this amendment is intended to cure that evil. Therefore I think there can be objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs the necessity for including the language on page 39, from line 16 down to and including line 22, ending with the word "year." That is the Revised Statute to-day, identically, word for word, section 3732. I simply want to know the reason for that.

Mr. HULL. My understanding was that it was not exactly the same.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is identically the same, word for word. Now, the reason I ask that is this: It may be that the act of 1872, passed subsequent to this, effected in some way a change of the previous statute, but my understanding is that it does not; that this is the statute to-day.

Mr. HULL. My understanding was that it was not entirely covered, and as a matter of precautionary safety they asked us to put it in. I did not look it up specially.

Mr. TAWNEY. I had occasion to look it up in connection with the proposed transportation of troops to the Philippine Islands.

Mr. HULL. The other proviso respecting Fort Bayard is new.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understand that. The only question I wish to have answered is why it was necessary to reenact this.

Mr. HULL. That was the information that we had.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, I think I can answer the gentleman's question. The words "or medical and hospital supplies" are new. It included all of these articles except those included in those words.

Mr. HULL. Yes; that is correct. I recollect that now.

The Clerk read as follows:

Army Medical Museum and library: For Army Medical Museum, preservation of specimens, and the preparation and purchase of new specimens, $4,000.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word simply to put in a letter I have from the Quartermaster-General in regard to the band stand at Fort Riley, and while I will say I was correct in my statement that buildings were included, I was not correct as to the character of the buildings. I find that the Quartermaster-General explains it as a clerical error in the print. It should have been band stables, and I ask that this letter be read in my time and put in the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, March 1, 1906.

Hon. J. A. T. HULL,
Chairman House Committee on Military Affairs,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Referring to the item "Riley, band stand, $12,335," on page 56 of my hearing before your committee, you are respectfully advised that the word "stand" is a clerical error and should have been "stable." The building is a stable for horses of the field, staff, and band, and has a capacity of fifty-four animals. This error crept in through the haste that was necessary to revise the hearings and return them to your committee and from the fact that I had no opportunity to read the proof of them.

Very respectfully, yours,

C. F. HUMPHREY,
Quartermaster-General, United States Army.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I understand that this is a band stable?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is a band stable?

Mr. HULL. All cavalry bands are mounted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, then it is a stable for the horses of the members of the band?

Mr. HULL. Yes; and fifty-four horses are provided for in that stable.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And the stable is to cost $12,335?

Mr. HULL. It is to cost that, I understand. It is not completed yet. If the gentleman will read the hearings again he will see that that is the amount that has been allotted for this.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This was simply a clerical error, and was not a band stand, but a stable?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the gentleman know of what material the stable is to be built?

Mr. HULL. I do not.

Mr. PARKER. I do. All the stables there are of brick or stone, with concrete floors. I think they are of stone that is quarried near there, and the cheapest material to be found in that region.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am willing to admit that this is a little bit less expensive as a stable than it is as a stand.

Mr. FITZGERALD. While the gentleman from Iowa is on his feet and on that question, can he state as to whether all of these buildings, the cost of which is restricted to $20,000, are erected by enlisted men as provided by law, or are they erected under contract?

Mr. HULL. They are erected by contract.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If I recollect the law, as read by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], they can only be erected by enlisted men.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman is entirely wrong if he has any such idea as that. How could you build officers' quarters with enlisted men?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is my recollection of the law, which surprised me very much.

Mr. HULL. Your recollection is wrong.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman from New York that I inquired yesterday of an officer who is familiar with the situation out there, on the particular line that the gentleman himself is now examining into, and I was told that there were quarries on the ground of the Government reservation and that the services of prisoners there, and perhaps of soldiers under arrest, were used in quarrying stone for those buildings.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the law to which the gentleman referred is this:

Permanent barracks or quarters and buildings and structures of a permanent nature shall not be constructed unless detailed estimates shall have been previously submitted to Congress, and approved by a special appropriation for the same, except when constructed by the troops; and no such structures, the cost of which shall exceed $20,000, shall be erected unless by special authority of Congress.

Since citing this law yesterday, I have examined the original act, and I find the words "except when constructed by the troops" were not in the original act. I have not been able to find out when those words were inserted in the original law. I simply call attention to this in this connection because under a proper construction of this act, which is the only law authorizing the construction of barracks at forts, it seems to me impossible for the War Department to construct any building at forts without first submitting estimates to Congress, unless such buildings are built by troops at the fort, and when built by troops at a fort, such buildings so constructed shall not exceed in cost $20,000.

Mr. HULL. My judgment is the gentleman will find the law applying equally to buildings costing more than $20,000 under this bill by detailed estimates. Mr. Chairman, that is not before the House at all. If his reading of the law is correct, it means that the buildings erected by troops are taken out of both classes. It is a mere academic question, and the gentleman can carry out the debate before the Comptroller and law officers of the Government.

The Clerk read as follows:

Engineer equipment of troops: For pontoon material, tools, instruments, and supplies required for use in the engineer equipment of troops, including the purchase and preparation of engineer manuals, $40,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order against that in order to ask the gentleman a question. Was not that in last year's bill?

Mr. HULL. Certainly not. We had on hand a quantity of equipment, and we believed, from the showing made by the engineer last year, we could leave it out for that year. Now they make the showing that they must have it, as the materials wear out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HULL. I do not desire to say anything on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordnance stores—Ammunition: Manufacture or purchase of ammunition and materials therefor for small arms for reserve supply, and for the machinery necessary for its manufacture at arsenals; ammunition for burials at the National Soldiers' Home in Washington, D. C.; ammunition for firing the morning and evening gun at military posts prescribed by General Orders, No. 70, Headquarters of the Army, dated July 23, 1867, and at National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and its several Branches, including National Soldiers' Home in Washington, D. C., and Soldiers and Sailors' State Homes, $629,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the language in this paragraph after the words "supply," in line 12, down to and including the word "arsenals," in line 13, "and for the machinery necessary for its manufacture at arsenals," on the ground that it is not within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs and is new legislation. It is the identical question which was submitted to the House by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs and by Mr. Moody, a former member of the Committee on Appropriations, and I do not care to discuss it.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard for just a word in explanation of it. It is not the same as the question submitted by Mr. Moody and myself some years ago, because that was for an entire new plant. If the Chairman will bear with me, I want to call attention to the language used by General Crozier, but I will say first that, although the two items here have been divided up and the language has been changed in some respects, it does not change the effect.

When this language was proposed by General Crozier, I asked the question:

The CHAIRMAN. * * * I see you put in the words "machinery necessary for manufacture at arsenals."

General CROZIER. That wording is in most appropriations, and we find that it enables us to keep the plant up and purchase new machines when we need them.

The CHAIRMAN. It is more for keeping up old than in installing new plants?

In other words, without this language they can not even repair a machine. They are not trying to start any large plant. It is not intended to do so.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry? Is it not a fact that the machinery in these arsenals used in the manufacture of guns——

Mr. CAPRON. Ammunition.

Mr. TAWNEY. Ammunition and guns—the same thing—is all provided for in the sundry civil appropriation bill?

Mr. HULL. For the installation of the new plant, yes; not for keeping up the repairs.

Mr. TAWNEY. My colleague here, a member of the subcommittee on the fortifications bill, will verify the statement that in respect to every appropriation, almost, that was made for ammunition manufactured at arsenals, the identical words were included in the fortifications bill for the purchase of machinery, and the same identical explanation was made that General Crozier has given to the Military Committee.

Mr. LITTAUER. The repairs to the plant are taken care of in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. The machinery and everything.

Mr. HULL. Without some language of this kind it is impossible to keep the plant running. That is the idea I have from the General. We have always had the same language, and points of order have been raised heretofore; and it was on the installation of a new plant, as was the one submitted to the Speaker, that we were ruled against. But this language, which was General Crozier's statement, has been carried heretofore in some form of this character. I do not believe the point is good. It is a matter of indifference. It may stop the manufacture for a while, until they can go to the Committee on Appropriations. That is all right. It does not affect me any more than it does any other citizen of the country.

Mr. TAWNEY. I wish to say to the gentleman from Iowa that this question was directly involved in the decision to which I referred, touching so much of the estimate—$1,100,000 for the manufacture of arms, submitted on page 136 of the Book of Estimates for the fiscal year 1901—as includes machinery, tools, and fixtures for their manufacture.

Mr. HULL. For a new plant that was proposed to be built.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; this was for the manufacture of arms; and this particular item included the purchase of machinery, tools, and fixtures for their manufacture. Now, the difficulty arising from this concurrent jurisdiction on the part of two committees over a general subject, such as the military establishment, necessarily leads to more or less confusion.

It is impossible for the House to tell, without having this matter clearly defined, just what committees should appropriate or how much this Department is getting from Congress under one or the other of the two committees. In the preparation of the fortifications bill, every appropriation for the manufacture of ammunition includes this identical language, so that they have ample authority and sufficient amount of money to purchase or repair any machinery in any arsenal used for this purpose. If this language is stricken out on my point of order, it will prevent the duplication of appropriations for the same purposes.

Mr. HULL. Has the sundry civil bill passed the House?

Mr. TAWNEY. It has not. But in the fortifications bill there are provisions for identically this same thing—for the repairs of machinery.

Mr. HULL. That would be very proper there.

Mr. TAWNEY. I made an inquiry myself as to the necessity of including it——

Mr. HULL. We do not appropriate anything for the Watervliet Arsenal. You would have to have it in for the arsenal there.

Mr. TAWNEY. You are appropriating or proposing to appropriate for purchase of machinery in an arsenal, to be used in the manufacture of ammunition.

Mr. PARKER. Small-arms ammunition.

Mr. TAWNEY. Small-arms ammunition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair will call attention to the decision of Speaker Henderson. The decision was not limited to installation and buildings or plants, but contained also exactly the language to which the point of order has just been made. I read from the original decision of the Speaker, "And that the appropriations for buildings, installation of plants, machinery, tools, fixtures for the manufacture of small arms and equipment therefor to the Committee on Appropriations." Therefore, the Chair feels constrained to sustain the point of order.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs whether he knows to what extent smokeless powder is manufactured at the arsenals, if any?

Mr. HULL. I do not know that I can answer that.

Mr. GRAFF. After the fortification bill had been reported by the Committee on Appropriations and had passed this House, I was asked by a citizen of my own town, Peoria, Ill., Robert S. Waddell, president of the Buckeye Powder Company, to go to the War Department and ascertain what method was adopted by that Department in the purchase of smokeless powder. I went upon my mission and ascertained on my visit to the War Department that there was, in fact, absolutely no competition whatever, and that the submission of bids for smokeless powder to the War Department were theoretically on advertisements for smokeless powder, but as a matter of fact these advertisements were simply a matter of form; and while four different companies submit their bids year after year for smokeless powder, they all submit a bid at the same price—namely, 70 cents per pound for smokeless powder. About 5 cents' worth of alcohol went into the smokeless powder, leaving them 65 cents outside of the price paid for that ingredient for the manufacture and completion of that article for delivery. And I was informed by Mr. Waddell, of Peoria, president of this powder company, that the Government, paying 70 cents per pound for smokeless powder, as a matter of fact paid to these four bidders, bidding companies, a profit of about 100 per cent, and that as a matter of fact these four companies could furnish smokeless powder to the Government for 45 cents a pound and then have to themselves a profit of more than 25 per cent.

Furthermore, that these four companies, which are the Du Pont, which has a capacity of 7,000 pounds daily, or 22,100,000 pounds a year; the Laflin & Rand Company, which has a capacity of 7,000 pounds daily and 22,100,000 pounds yearly; the International, with a capacity of 6,000 pounds daily and 1,800,000 pounds yearly; and the California, which has a capacity of 4,000 pounds daily and 1,200,000 pounds yearly, are the four companies which are owned by what is known as the "Du Pont syndicate." It was insisted by this same citizen of my own city, who had himself been for twenty-one years with the Du Pont people, engaged in the manufacture of smokeless powder, that the Government could build plants, four plants, costing $250,000 each, and pay for those four plants out of the profits made now by the Du Pont syndicate in their sale to the Government of smokeless powder for a single year. I do not say this for the purpose of criticizing in any way the actions of the Committee on Military Affairs with regard to the pending item, but for the purpose of embodying this information in the RECORD, so that it may be a subject of future consideration by the committee of the House which has jurisdiction of this matter, which I understand to be the Committee on Appropriations. I understand the matter of Government powder mills could not properly be placed in the bill now pending, under the rules of this House. I desire to incorporate in my remarks a printed letter from Mr. Waddell, addressed to the President and Appropriations Committees of Congress, on this subject. Mr. Waddell is a business man of high standing and a man of intelligence.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

To the President and Appropriations Committees of Congress,
Washington, D. C.:

This country, through the wisdom of Congress, has expended hundreds of millions of dollars in building a Navy and constructing fortifications for the defense of the Republic in times of peril. Many more millions have been expended in guns and ordnance for the use of the Navy and Army, for without these our ships and forts would be worthless. You are about to appropriate additional millions of dollars for ships, guns, men, and munitions of war. Without powder to hurl the shot and shells our Navy would be "as idle as a painted ship upon a painted ocean."

Yet this great country is wholly dependent in times of peace and war on one gigantic trust that has an absolute and exclusive monopoly for the manufacture of all the powder that the Government requires for offensive and defensive use. When you know beyond a doubt that the Du Pont trust is owned and controlled by men who daily, continually, and openly defy and break the laws of the States and nation, how much faith can be placed in their loyalty and patriotism in times of emergency and national distress?

The Du Pont powder trust owns and controls the Laflin & Rand, International, and California powder companies. They all bid separately the same price for ordnance smokeless powder, 70 cents per pound, the United States Government to furnish the alcohol, which costs approximately 5 cents per pound. This powder is made by the "powder trust" under inspection of Army and Navy officers stationed at the plants, and who know it is composed of cotton saturated in nitric and sulphuric acids, then washed, forming gun cotton that costs from 20 to 22 cents per pound. The gun cotton is then gelatinized, and when completed, with all salaries and expenses added, costs 30 to 35 cents per pound. The Navy and War Departments pay the Du Pont trust 70 cents a pound for all the Government consumes.

For several years the Departments paid the powder pool (Du Pont and Laflin & Rand) 88 and 90 cents per pound. Then the International plant was built and competition reduced the price to the present basis, when the Du Pont trust obtained control of the International product.

The capacity of the several plants are about as follows: Du Pont, 7,000 pounds daily, 2,100,000 pounds yearly; Laflin & Rand, 7,000 pounds daily, 2,100,000 pounds yearly; International, 6,000 pounds daily, 1,800,000 pounds yearly; California, 4,000 pounds daily, 1,200,000 pounds yearly.

The three eastern seaboard plants are in almost constant operation. Estimating the consumption of the Government at the capacity of the plants, say, 7,200,000 pounds per year, the net profits of the Du Pont trust are $2,520,000 a year.

The United States Government can build and equip four better plants than the "trust" owns at a cost not exceeding $250,000 each, pay for these plants out of the profits extorted from the people in a single year, and have more than a million dollars left in the Treasury that would, under present conditions, be paid to further enrich the "trust." The Navy and Army can detail scores of men, graduates of the academies, who are more competent to direct the making of the powder than those who supply it.

To the query, "If the profits are so large, why do not capitalists invest and compete?"

They know the conditions and methods of the powder trust; that the United States Government is hopelessly at the mercy of this monster, which recently swelled its capital from two millions to fifty millions, on paper. These capitalists know the competition they would offer would prove futile, and in declining assign reasons that are good, but are not complimentary to our Government.

The independent manufacturers of blasting powder and dynamite are defending their right to exist against the unfair, destructive, grafting practices of the Du Pont trust, with its rule or ruin policy. These manufacturers, holding charters from many States permitting them to conduct business, and their employees and friends have read the honest and highly commendable public utterances of the President demanding fair dealing for all the people, and they know that the United States Government is furnishing the powder trust the money that is being used to destroy all competitors of the "trust" throughout the country.

These independent manufacturers know that the Du Pont trust is one of the founders and a party to the international agreement between itself and European dynamite manufacturers fixing prices and dividing the markets of the world. They also understand the influence of this gigantic organization on the construction of the Panama Canal. It discounts Colonel Sellers's eyewater, for there is no lacking ingredient.

The executive and judicial departments are making heroic but vain efforts to enforce the antitrust laws, and the legislative branch is approving such action, or these laws would be repealed. To continue present conditions will stultify the Government.

If required, we will furinsh detailed proofs of all these statements and abundant evidence of more than I have mentioned.

Knowing that the Du Pont trust has an absolute, exclusive monopoly of all the resources of national defense and is levying extortions amounting to millions of dollars yearly on the taxpayers of the country, can the representatives of the people in Congress afford to appropriate money to perpetuate these conditions or the President approve such expenditures?

Congress appropriates and the War and Navy Departments expend the funds contributed by the whole people. The Departments are hopelessly in the clutches of the Du Pont trust, and the responsibility for this condition rests on Congress and the President.

I submit that the United States Government should not be particeps criminis in this exclusive monopoly of the trust; that the appropriation should be for powder factories that will produce supplies for the Army and Navy wholly independent of unlawful combinations. Any other course would be dangerous and a menace to the public welfare.

Whatever might at one time have been said favorable to support of individual manufacturers, this sentiment vanished with the "passing" of the individual and the advent of the trust. When any combination of millionaires flagrantly defies the law, creates an exclusive monopoly, corners the market against the United States Government on the one article without the use of which the Army and Navy would be useless, levies an extortionate price in times of peace, who could advocate such a cause? When the call comes to the patriots of the land to offer their lives at $13 per month to defend the flag, who can name the price at which the Du Pont trust will offer its products?

In times of peace this trust has prepared for war. It has cornered the market against the Government. With this knowledge, will Congress take any chances?

Should appropriations be made for purchase of powder from the trust and no provision be made to free the country from its clutches, it would be appropriate for the great Atlantic Squadron, the pride of the nation, to assemble off Barnegat and join the forts in a salute across the mud flats of Jersey, half to the honor of the old flag and the other half for the profit of their dictator, the Du Pont trust.

Perhaps it might be well to pull down Old Glory and hoist the royal purple standard of the trust so long as the country may remain under its absolute dominion. While the heads of the people are bowed in humiliation before this unlawful monopoly I would suggest another salute across the Atlantic in honor of the modern sentiment, slightly paraphrased: "Millions of dollars for tribute to the Du Pont powder trust, but not a single dollar for defense."

Respectfully,

ROBERT S. WADDELL.

PEORIA, ILL., February 22, 1906.

Mr. RIXEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

Mr. GRAFF. I yield to the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. RIXEY. I understand the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois to be that the powder makers could make this powder for about 50 per cent of what they are paid?

Mr. GRAFF. That is it; and leave a profit to the manufacturers.

Mr. RIXEY. I merely want to call the gentleman's attention right on that line to the statement made by Admiral Mason two or three weeks ago. He stated that the cost of manufacturing smokeless powder at Indian Head was 60 cents a pound, and that we pay for what we purchase 70 cents a pound. I have the hearings here, and that is the statement of Admiral Mason, who is Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance. The Government now owns a factory at Indian Head, which was enlarged there—I was very active in securing the appropriation for the enlargement of that factory—and it is my belief that we ought to manufacture more powder there. Admiral Mason said that we only manufacture about 20 per cent of what we use and that what we manufacture costs us 60 cents, whereas what we purchase costs us 70 cents.

Mr. TAWNEY. Can the gentleman state the daily capacity of that factory at Indian Head?

Mr. RIXEY. I can not state it at this moment, although I have no doubt the figures appear in the hearings.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Three thousand pounds.

Mr. GRAFF. I desire to state further to the gentleman from Virginia that it was claimed by people who corresponded with me on this subject that on investigation it will be found to be true that there are no adequate facilities, including these private enterprises which now furnish practically all the Government uses of powder, to provide sufficient powder to anywhere nearly meet the needs of the country in time of war.

Mr. RIXEY. I think the hearings before the Naval Committee showed the fact that plenty of powder can be secured. The hearings went to the extent, however, of stating that it took three to six months, perhaps, to prepare this powder; that it had to be dried out, and so on; and for that and other reasons a large amount of powder had to be carried in reserve, which deteriorated to some extent; and it is a nice question as to how much powder ought to be carried in reserve, in view of the fact that it does deteriorate.

Mr. HULL. It deteriorates slightly, but not as much as formerly.

Mr. GRAFF. There is another statement which I desire to call to the attention of gentlemen, which is to the effect that the Du Pont syndicate have recapitalized their plant to the extent of ten times their original capitalization, and we would naturally infer that that increased capitalization must have been based upon the large profits which were derived from the manufacture and sale of powder.

Mr. RIXEY. I will state to the gentleman that I am sure that the hearings have demonstrated the fact that these smokeless-powder concerns are practically in agreement, and that there is practically no competition by these different factories in regard to the prices at which powder is furnished to the Government. The only protection which the Government has is the fact, as far as the Navy is concerned, that it has a smokeless-powder factory.

Mr. GRAFF. If what the gentleman says is true, that it costs the Government 60 cents a pound to make smokeless powder at Indian Head, it seems exceedingly strange to me that these four powder companies, syndicated as they are, and knowing that they are the only bidders that there are in this country, and the only competitors for the demand for this powder on the part of the Government, would be so generous as to demand only 10 cents a pound profit, which is an exceedingly small profit for a syndicated body of manufacturers to ask from the Government when they have the Government entirely at their mercy, which is admitted on all hands.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RIXEY. I move to strike out the last word. I would like to state to the gentleman that the reason is very plain. It is because the Government owns a powder factory at which it can make its own powder, and can thus control the price.

Mr. GRAFF. To what extent?

Mr. RIXEY. If it did not get the powder at a reasonable price, it could enlarge its factory at Indian Head and make all its powder there. The factory should be enlarged.

Mr. GRAFF. But the Indian Head capacity is only 3,000 pounds daily, and each one of these four plants that are now privately conducted by the Du Pont syndicate has a capacity of twice that amount. Each one of them has a capacity of twice that, and it is admitted—and I have heard it from authoritative sources which I do not feel at liberty to quote now—that there is an inadequate capacity in the United States to-day to fill the need of powder should war be precipitated.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield for a question? Can the gentleman state to the House what that 60 cents of cost per pound includes? Does it include any interest on the investment at Indian Head, anything for depreciation of plant, anything for the probable blowing up of the plant, which usually occurs once in about five years?

Mr. RIXEY. It does include interest upon the plant and also a reasonable allowance for depreciation.

Mr. YOUNG. And how much is that?

Mr. RIXEY. I could not tell you that.

Mr. SLAYDEN. If the gentleman from Virginia will permit me——

Mr. YOUNG. Does not the gentleman know that the life of one of these powder plants is ordinarily not to exceed five years, that they blow up in that time, on an average?

Mr. RIXEY. I have always understood that the estimate included an allowance for depreciation. But, Mr. Chairman, I rose for the purpose of giving the statement of Admiral Mason, chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, as to the cost of the making of smokeless powder. The evidence is that it costs 60 cents a pound. There is no evidence of what it would cost the Government to purchase powder if we had no powder plant. It may be we could not make all the powder at Indian Head. The very fact that we have there a good plant, that we have men who can make this powder, and that it is easy to enlarge the plant is the reason why, in my judgment, we are enabled to purchase the powder at a reasonable price.

Mr. GRAFF. What per cent of the entire amount of smokeless powder used by the Government is produced at Indian Head at the present time?

Mr. RIXEY. About 20 per cent for the Navy.

Mr. GRAFF. And for the Army?

Mr. RIXEY. I do not suppose any part of it is used for the Army.

Mr. GRAFF. It would be an insignificant amount compared with the total amount.

Mr. RIXEY. I suppose if the Army used as much as the Navy it would be not far from 10 per cent.

Mr. GRAFF. Does the gentleman from Virginia think that the existence of the plant at Indian Head is any great threat of competition to private enterprise at the present time sufficient to cause them to lower their prices?

Mr. RIXEY. I do not know whether you would call it a threat or not; but I am sure that that is the reason why we get the powder at this comparatively reasonable price over what it costs the Government to make it.

Mr. GRAFF. Outside of the question of price, does not the gentleman think it is a vital question whether the Government will have facilities for procuring a sufficient amount of smokeless powder to meet the exigencies of the case when we are spending millions for mines, for coast defense, military establishment, naval establishment, in the event of war?

Mr. RIXEY. I have no doubt that we can get, in a reasonable time, all the powder we need. But I will go further and state to the gentleman that I will go as far as he will in providing for an increase in this factory at Indian Head for smokeless powder, and that I will then go with him, if he will go with me, and build an armor-plate factory to protect the Government against the greatest trust that has lived upon the appropriations by Congress for the past twenty years. We ought to have a factory of that kind; we ought to be able, if we never made a pound of armor plate, to make it; and if we had our own factory it would pay the interest upon the cost though we never used it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have been very much interested in the debate on this item, and have received some little political encouragement from it. As a member of a party which has been engaged in trust baiting for some years, and which in doing so has marched from disaster to disaster, I welcome as allies my friend from Illinois and his associates. I think they will now go on to destruction. But, Mr. Chairman, I must confess I do not have as much indignation toward this alleged powder trust as I did have before I learned something about the facts of the case yesterday. While the powder manufacturers are perhaps charging a considerable profit, in view of the hazard of the business, it does not appear to be excessive. I had a conversation with an ordnance officer yesterday, in whose ability and in whose accuracy and judgment I have great confidence, and out of that conversation I have made a little brief memorandum which I will give to the House. The plant at Indian Head cost the Government $625,000. Then, figuring the interest on the plant, which is done here to get at the cost of that powder, at 6 per cent, and making for each year an allowance of 10 per cent for depreciation, and estimating insurance at the rate usually carried by powder manufactories, say, 6 per cent, the cost of the powder has been found to be 61 cents per pound. This price includes the cost of alcohol that is an important item in the manufacture of smokeless powder.

Mr. GRAFF. I desire to ask the gentleman whether his calculation is not somewhat misleading, because the plant at Indian Head is used for experimental purposes and for other purposes besides the making of smokeless powder?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I can only reply to that by saying that these figures were given me by a very careful man, and he assured me that they were an accurate computation.

Mr. GRAFF. I understand the plant at Indian Head is used for experimental purposes, for the testing of explosives in the matter of ordnance and ammunition; in other words, they do other things there besides the manufacture of smokeless powder.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; and they test armor plate.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But that has nothing to do with the manufacture of smokeless powder.

Mr. GRAFF. There are guns there, I am told, also, so the plant is used for that purpose, and it would not be fair to charge the plant to this single purpose when it is used for a great many others.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Unquestionably; but I was assured by the gentleman who gave me these figures, who is a very careful man, one of the brightest and ablest men in the Ordnance Corps, that that was as nearly a correct estimate of the cost of the manufacture of powder, adopting the usual commercial methods of computation, as it was possible to make. The cost of the powder which we buy under contract for the use of the Army is 70 cents a pound plus about 5 cents as representing the cost of the alcohol, which we furnish them free.

Mr. Chairman, this suggests the thought that if the Committee on Ways and Means and the House, in its wisdom, should give us untaxed alcohol for industrial purposes it would enable us to get cheaper powder for all purposes throughout the country, for sportsmen as well as for commercial uses.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the gentleman, there is only 5 cents' worth of alcohol in a pound, and if we take off the tax how much difference would it make?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am unable to estimate that.

Mr. YOUNG. Two cents, would it not?

Mr. SLAYDEN. It would have some influence in fixing the price of powder.

Mr. GRAFF. Right there, I was told by an officer in the War Department that the tax does not enter into this calculation, because under the law the manufacturer of smokeless powder for governmental purposes is given the alcohol tax free.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have just stated that fact, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman from Texas made any calculation as to about how much cheaper the Government would be able to furnish this alcohol if the bill now pending in the Committee on Ways and Means should be passed into law?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentleman from Ohio that I have not made such a calculation, but I am told materially cheaper.

Mr. GROSVENOR. How much does the Government now pay?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I understand that alcohol could be had then for industrial purposes at probably 12 or 15 cents a gallon. Am I correct in that?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Possibly; I do not know. My point is this, How much tax does the Government now pay?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have stated twice that the Government pays no tax.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then it will not make one hair white or black.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Unquestionably not, but it will make a difference in the cost to manufacturers at large, and it might ultimately result in the establishment of more factories to supply the commercial as well as the military trade.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. With reference to the feature spoken of by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF] of this being a trust, there can be no question about it. I am assured by military authorities that the same competitive bid was made by the four great powder companies in this country, and that all the circumstances of this bidding indicated that there was collusion in the making of this price. In reference to my inquiry as to the standard of powder made by these companies, he said it was up to the required military standard. That, however, may reasonably be expected, as the Government maintains its own inspectors at the plants, and when powder is turned out for the use of the Government it goes out with the approval of the officers who are stationed there. When General Crozier, Chief of Ordnance, was before the Committee on Military Affairs, we interrogated him with reference to the accumulation of supplies for the use of the Government. The House will remember that we have been told frequently that when the Spanish-American war came on there was an inadequate supply of ammunition in this country to meet any sort of hostile attack. Now, Mr. Chairman, I for one never want to see that condition of affairs again, and much as I am opposed to having the Government engage in commercial enterprises of any sort, I would gladly see the Government embark in the manufacture of ammunition and guns and armor plate for the defense of the country rather than be put at the mercy of trusts who can hold us up in a moment of peril.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, we have established, since the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] and myself have been Members of Congress, in the last seven or eight or nine years, a Government powder factory. To what extent has that supplied the Government with powder, and what effect has it had upon the cost of the powder?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Except the small plant down here at Indian Head, concerning which we have just spoken definitely, the Government has no powder plant. My colleague from Texas [Mr. GILLESPIE] has now at the Clerk's desk an amendment which he proposes to offer to this paragraph to appropriate $100,000 to start the erection of a powder plant for the manufacture of powder for the Army.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, just a minute more. The Secretary of the Navy—I think Secretary Long—recommended the building of a Government powder factory to get the Government out of being oppressed by the powder trust, and we have time and again appropriated for the purpose of seeing how the Government could work that. What effect has that factory had on the quality and price of this powder?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. Chairman, that that plant is now in operation about 50 miles from the city of Washington, at Indian Head, making 3,000 pounds of powder a day.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And your idea is to enlarge it?

Mr. SLAYDEN. No; but that we ought to have one for the Army. That at Indian Head is for the Navy only.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from the Committee on Appropriations who opened this subject has just touched the fringe of one of the greatest dangers that beset this country if it should ever come into a time of war. It is well known that at the outbreak of the war with Spain we had only enough powder to fire one or two rounds from some of the guns in our Navy. It is not so well known that the present annual capacity of all the powder mills of this country would suffice us for but a day or two—I will not give the exact time—of actual war, and that the accumulations of powder that have been made, owing partly to changes in its form and character as improvements have been made and owing partly to the fear of deterioration which was expressed by the Navy Department, although it is not believed in by the War Department, that these accumulations are not large. We have, fortunately, a great quantity of manufacturing establishments, however, that deal with the same dangerous materials—the nitrates, nitric acid, and gun cotton—and there are celluloid companies, or manufacturers of substances in the nature of celluloid, which in the case of necessity could change their plants or, at any rate, furnish workmen who are used to dealing with these materials; and, in my judgment and that of people acquainted with the subject, we could very largely increase our capacity of manufacture in case of necessity. But there is one condition that lies back of all, and that is that the original material out of which the modern powders are made, whether for use in the mines or in the Army or Navy, is not found in this country. All of these powders used to be black powders made out of charcoal and saltpeter. Now they are all new. There is nitroglycerine, made out of nitric acid and glycerine, and gun cotton, which is made out of nitric acid and cotton. Then there is dynamite, which, I believe, has a certain clay added to nitroglycerine; but the foundation of all is in the nitric acid, and the foundation of nitric acid from which it is made is found commercially solely in the nitrates produced in Chile, and which are thence exported in very large quantities to the various countries of the world.

Every country that expects war has laid up, not an extensive quantity of smokeless powder, though they have enough at least to carry them for some months of consumption until they can make more, but every country which respects itself and its national honor is at least beginning to buy these nitrates from Chile at a cost of only about 2 cents a pound. That cost would be very greatly increased if any sudden run were made upon the market, but the cost remains about the same so long as the market is not disturbed, and a prudent government lays by these nitrates for use in case of necessity. They do not depreciate. They can be piled out of doors and rained on all the year.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How about the powder, though?

Mr. PARKER. As I say, the War Department says that its powder does not depreciate, whereas the Navy Department seems to have some fear of that depreciation; and that matter is not settled. Now, only a word on the point that was raised. I believe in a Government plant to make some powder. I believe that it cuts down the price. I do not believe that if all the items of cost are considered the Government ever makes it so cheaply as private individuals or can make it so cheaply. I believe also that the maintenance in the field of large factories throughout the United States engaged in this work should be hailed, because every one is a new center which can be enlarged at any time, and we do not want to confine this matter to any one Government monopoly at any one place, because, with many men and many minds at the work, it can be enlarged to meet our necessities in time of need.

Mr. GRAFF. How are you going to accomplish the increase of our powder factories in this country?

Mr. PARKER. I do not know. If the prices are too high the nitrates are free to all and competition will come in time.

Mr. GRAFF. The fact is, I am informed, when one of these powder factories was outside of the trust at that time the price had been 90 cents a pound. Through the competition brought about through the existence of this one independent powder factory it was brought down to 60 cents a pound. Afterwards the Dupont syndicate purchased the independent plant, so now they are all in unison and simply fix the price arbitrarily that the Government has to pay for the powder.

Mr. PARKER. It has been stated that we hold down the price by our plant at Indian Head. I believe in such a plant. I do not believe in attempting a Government monopoly, but rather a Government rivalry, which will hold down the price.

Mr. GRAFF. How could 3,000 pounds daily manufactured at Indian Head be any factor in keeping down the price?

Mr. PARKER. I do not know, sir.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CRUMPACKER in the chair). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I only wanted, as the question had been raised, to bring before this House the necessity of our supporting any committee, whether it be of the Navy, of the Army, or of the general appropriations, in any appropriation from time to time, which will aid our Government quietly, as it may be, or openly, if it will, to acquire these indispensable supplies for this country within the near future. The Chief of Ordnance says that in fourteen years he will have powder for the Army. But Congress must not fail to see that we have abundant stores of the indispensable and comparatively cheap material of which powder is made, and which we shall be sure to need in time of war.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that we proceed with the consideration of the bill. We have had an hour now, and over.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will defer his request for a moment or two.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman can have time on something else. I understand that there is an amendment at the desk, and I ask that it be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GILLESPIE] offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 22, page 43, add the following: "One hundred and fifty thousand of which shall be expended in the establishment of a plant for the purpose of manufacturing gunpowder."

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order. I will reserve it, however, in order to let the gentleman talk, if he desires to do so.

Mr. YOUNG. I will make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. GILLESPIE. I submit that under this paragraph providing for engaging in the manufacture of powder it appears that it is an enlargement of the work on the part of the Government. I submit also that it is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the gentleman will yield to me for a moment, I will say that I think we have had that question time and again passed upon here, that where it simply enlarges a building that is already in existence it is not subject to a point of order. I think we had it in this very powder matter or some other similar matter.

Mr. HULL. This is no limitation on the appropriation. In other words, under the language of the amendment we could not build any structure. Therefore this is a provision for extending and providing for the erection of something that is not now authorized by law at all.

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment seems to be for the establishment of a new factory for the manufacture of gunpowder. The Chair is of the opinion that it is new legislation, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. GILLESPIE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 22, page 43, insert: "Provided, That no part of the said $629,000 shall be paid to any trust or combination in restraint of trade nor to any corporation having a monopoly of the manufacture and supply of gunpowder in the United States, except in the event of an emergency."

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that. It is new legislation and changes existing law. The Secretary now has discretion.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. YOUNG] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. YOUNG. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that it is a limitation upon the appropriation contained in the paragraph.

Mr. GILLESPIE. Mr. Chairman, it seems to be admitted all around that the Government is in the clutches of an immense powder trust, a concern that exists clearly in violation of law. And the Government has its own agents there inspecting the powder produced by this illegal combination, and is in possession of the facts that stamp this concern as a violator of the law of this country. We are spending from four to five million dollars a year for powder for the Army and Navy. The only hope of escaping this powder monopoly lies in erecting and operating our own powder plants. These concerns are the masters of this Government. They are debauching the public conscience. They are gathering to themselves all the natural sources of supply of the people and the Government. It is practically admitted that the armor-plate trust dictates prices to the Government and takes its millions from the people. See what a step the steel trust has taken, as shown by the following article from this morning's Washington Post:

BIG DEAL IN IRON ORE—STEEL CORPORATION'S CONTRACT WITH JAMES J. HILL—ONE BILLION ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FIVE MILLION DOLLARS IS INVOLVED—LEASE OF ALL THE HILL ORE PROPERTIES ON THE MESABA RANGE TO RUN FOR THIRTY YEARS—GUARANTEES IMMENSE INCOME FOR GREAT NORTHERN RAILROAD—DEAL PRACTICALLY CLOSED—ORE PRICES INCREASE.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, February 28, 1906.

It is stated that a deal involving iron ore amounting to as great a tonnage as all the ore mined in the Lake Superior ranges during the more than fifty years of their operation, a deal by which the immensely valuable ore properties of James J. Hill on the Mesaba Range are to pass into the control of the United States Steel Corporation for a period of thirty years, is about to be consummated. A special from Duluth to the Iron Trade Review concerning the deal says:

"Although no official announcement has been made, your correspondent is informed, on authority reliable beyond a question, that all of the principal terms have been agreed upon and the contract drawn. It is estimated that the Hill interests have ore deposits amounting to 300,000,000 tons, which, delivered at Lake Erie ports, would be worth $1,125,000,000.

"INCREASING PRICE FOR ORE.

"The terms of the contract provide that the steel corporation shall take a lease on these properties for thirty years, and shall pay for the first two years 70 cents per ton for the ore mined and 80 cents for the carrying of the ore from the mines to Duluth on Mr. Hill's Great Northern Railroad. It is further provided that after two years the price for ore in the ground shall be increased 5 cents every two years until, at the end of twelve years, the price shall be $1, and stay at that figure for the remaining eighteen years of the period.

"Another important provision is that the Great Northern Railroad shall be guaranteed freight amounting to 10,000,000 tons annually during the life of the lease. If mines other than those in the deal furnish the amount, the steel corporation will not be required to furnish any, but it must supply whatever is taken of the stipulated tonnage.

"IMPORTANCE OF THE DEAL.

"The great advantage of this important transaction to the corporation is evident. It insures the corporation a tremendous tonnage, and prevents the possibility of competing companies getting control of these great deposits. The policy of the officials of the corporation will be highly commended, and at the same time it is clear that the transaction will be very profitable to the Hill railroad. Last year this railroad carried 6,500,000 tons of ore, and by the new arrangement it will largely increase this tonnage at a guaranteed rate which can not be set aside by any legislation. The income which would result from the royalty would be fully $250,000,000 for all the ore, and the $8,000,000 per year which will be earned by carrying the ore will, of course, be additional. It can not, however, be stated with certainty that the corporation will mine all the Hill ore in thirty years."

It is understood that the question as to whether the quality of the ore is to be guaranteed is still undecided.

How can the Government insist that individuals be punished for violating the property rights of these concerns when they so unblushingly violate the rights not only of individuals but of communities and States and yet go unwhipped of justice? I submit, Mr. Chairman, that something ought to be done somewhere by this Congress to teach these concerns that we are not going to be always bowed down before them and subject to their extortion and dictation. The Government seems paralyzed before them.

Now, it has been intimated here that we could make more powder at Indian Head if the plant were run at its full capacity. Now, why is it not run at its full capacity? We would naturally conclude the officers of the Government overseeing both plants—because Mr. Waddell says in his article that officers of the Government inspect the powder trust's output—that it is purposely held back in order that the powder trust might get a profit of 14 cents a pound on powder, the Government paying that much more to the trust than it costs the Government to manufacture powder. I think it can be clearly learned by consulting those in authority that if the plant at Indian Head were increased and the people in charge of it forced to run it at its full capacity that the powder would not cost the Government 61 cents a pound as now stated by the gentleman from Texas. The gentleman from Illinois, according to this Mr. Waddell, from whom he quoted, shows that the powder can be manufactured for 40 cents a pound, and he seems to be a man who knows what he is talking about. And yet we stand all this, while the Government is absolutely held up by this powder trust and compelled to pay them 74 cents a pound for this powder. That is a condition I desire to protest against. [Loud applause.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, we have but to go back a year or two to find that the Secretary of the Navy said that he was not able—I do not recollect precisely his words, but I give them in substance—that we were not able to make the smokeless powder that the Government needed. Congress then established a powder factory for the purpose of not only getting enough powder for our military uses and of the proper quality, but for the purpose of vieing with this monopoly that seems to be now holding up the Government. I was not in the Chamber when the statement was made here—I presume it was made—that this powder factory is not being run to its full capacity, because, it is claimed, in effect, it would furnish too much competitive powder. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas who said the factory was not run to its full capacity?

Mr. GILLESPIE. I think it was the gentleman from Virginia who made that statement.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. RIXEY. I do not know that I made that statement. I am not informed on the subject, and I do not know whether it is run to its full capacity.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do you know how much it does make?

Mr. RIXEY. I am informed it makes about 20 per cent of what we use.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It makes about 20 per cent of what we need for the Navy. Why not enlarge it to make all we need?

But, Mr. Chairman, what I rose particularly to urge is this: The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY] and I entered Congress the same year—March 4, 1897. He and I have favored the building of a Government armor-plate factory, not so much for the purpose of making in this factory armor plate, but that it might be held in terrorem over this monopoly that has been holding up the Government and compelling it to pay unreasonable prices for that indispensable product—armor plate. President Lincoln commented upon the condition of the United States during the civil war, and in substance said that we had no Government factories to furnish military supplies, and recommended the building of public factories for that purpose. I have frequently said on the floor of this House, Mr. Chairman, that foreign countries have these public factories, and they divide public work between the public factory and that of the private factory to keep both in good running order and to avoid monopoly and be ready for war by the aid of both kinds of factories. Thus the private factory and the government factory are kept in readiness to meet any of the responsibilities of peace or war.

Another point, Mr. Chairman: A Government factory is supervised and watched day and night by an officer of the Army or Navy under oath, and subject to court-martial if derelict. Hence there is little chance of the factory being burned or destroyed. A private factory is watched by private individuals and private labor, not under oath, not subject to being court-martialed, not subject to being punished if they go to sleep at their posts. Hence fires may occur. If we erect a Government armor factory or a Government powder factory which is watched day and night by men under oath, the officers or watchmen may be court-martialed if they do not do their duty. Therefore there is less liability of the destruction of it. Again, a private factory could sell out to the enemy, a public factory could not.

It does seem to me that the great committee having this matter in charge should make an appropriation at an early day to extend this Government powder factory, not so much for the purpose of making all our powder, but so that we would have it in time of war and peace to meet any exigency. With this factory, at all times we could compete more successfully with the powder trust which seems to be in existence.

I should like to ask whether the Department of Justice is investigating this powder factory trust. I will ask my friend from Iowa [Mr. HULL] if there is any investigation in progress on that subject. Here is one gentleman on the Republican side [Mr. GRAFF] and one on the Democratic side [Mr. GILLESPIE], both of whom say, and nobody disputes it, that here is a great unlawful powder concern that is to-day doing business with and holding up the Government at oppressive prices. I presume that the Attorney-General—good, industrious, faithful man that he is—is investigating the matter, but I should like to ask, What are the facts?

Mr. HULL. I have no information on the subject. I suppose the gentleman from Tennessee is always correct on those matters.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The presumption of law is that the Attorney-General is doing his duty, but what is the fact? I will say, however, that Attorney-General Moody has done more against the trusts than any Attorney-General we have ever had, but he has had more money and more law to do so than his predecessors. I want to give him more law and more money to keep up this work, and I should like to see this powder monopoly investigated. It should be at once, but I do not believe anything is being done in this matter to curb this combine.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who has precipitated this discussion belongs to the Committee on Appropriations, and the Committee on Appropriations, under the rules of the House, is the only power that can start this building for a powder plant unless there is an independent law providing that it shall be done. But as a part of the national defense I should imagine if the estimates were submitted to Congress they would be referred to that committee, and then they would have full power to act. The Indian Head powder plant is entirely outside of the jurisdiction either of the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Was that powder factory erected under a special or a general law?

Mr. HULL. It was instituted on an appropriation bill reported by the Naval Committee; but we have absolutely nothing to do with it. Whether it is run to its full capacity or not run at all is none of the business of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. HULL. Yes; provided I do not get cut off so that I can not speak to the amendment. I want to speak to the amendment. Does the gentleman desire to ask a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I notice in this bill that we are already manufacturing ammunition and materials therefor for small arms for reserve supply.

Mr. HULL. It says "manufacture or purchase of ammunition."

Mr. WILLIAMS. And we appropriate for the machinery necessary for the manufacture of ammunition at arsenals.

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman that the words "machinery necessary for its manufacture," and so forth, went out on a point of order, and the Chair has held that that belongs entirely to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Lines 10 to 22, on page 43?

Mr. HULL. Commencing at the word "supply," in line 12, on page 43, down to and including the word "arsenals," in line 13, and those words have gone out.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That does not strike out the language then "manufacture or purchase of ammunition?"

Mr. HULL. Not at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then if there is still a proviso for the manufacture or purchase of ammunition——

Mr. HULL. Under those words what we purchased is covered by this appropriation, and what we manufacture in the way of cartridges is covered by this appropriation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But this language says not only purchase, but manufacture.
